Now, then, I have considered your bill from a national industrial standpoint, and under your theory have tried to show that it is a bad bill. Now, then, from an international standpoint, what has been our policy in the Orient? It has been the policy of the "open door" for the commerce of Christendom in all parts of the "open door" for the commerce of Christendom in all parts of the East. In that we stood side by side with England and Japan—trying to hold down Russia and France to a compliance with that policy—and yet you did not give an "open door" in the Philippines, and failed to emphasize the traditional oriental policy of the United States—failed to set an example there by giving an absolute free entrance to the goods of the world, and establishing absolute free ports, the very thing we most aspire to in the Orient. Very did not do it in the Orient. You did not do it.

I do not say that we would have done it, because under the Democratic theory we would have had the power perhaps, but we would not have had the right to make a distinction in duties at Manila and San Francisco. But under your theory you had the power, you had the right, and you knew this traditional policy in the East. You have deserted the traditional oriental policy of the United States in international commercial affairs in this very

I say, gentlemen upon the Democratic side, that this question I say, gentlemen upon the Democratic side, that this question is no longer a question of constitutional power. The Constitution has received an amendment by construction—look at the question from either standpoint of preconceived opinion—or else it has received a proper construction; at any rate, that power is adjudged under these decisions by a shifting majority of one, it is true, but still adjudged. But I say the question remains with you and me, with the history of the old Democracy behind us, with the history of the United States behind us, built up by colmization under Democratic regime the colonization of the American onization under Democratic régime, the colonization of the American people carrying their sons and daughters with them to build up homes in the wilderness, carrying with them the laws and institutions of the country, the white man's code of ethics, the white man's civilization, his peculiar and ever-sacred family life—with this old Democratic history behind us the question remains with this old Democratic history beaund us the question remains with you and me, Are we prepared for this lack of uniformity, this lack of equity, this lack of equality, this absence of "manifest justice?" As long as these people are a part of the United States let them be treated as a part of the United States, and in order that we may not do any injustice to our own people, let us get rid of them as a part of the Union.

I am glad that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] yesterday coincided in an opinion that I had long since expressed in this House. Gentlemen say we can not get rid of these islands. We can. Give them independence under a de facto government; help them create that government, founded on an electorate intelligent, and substantial; extend to them a protectorate for a prescribed and limited time; then leave them to their fate.

If you will not do that, get rid of them somehow. If the worst comes to the worst, dispose of them as you came by them, in the way of barter and traffic. Bad enough? Yes. But better for us and our children than to hold them. Let us exchange them with Japan, with Germany, or with England—I do not say for Canada, because we can not get that; Canada is self-governing and free but for Jamaica, for the Barbados, St. Kitts, or the Bahamas, that fret our southern coast, or Vancouver, that frets the coast of Washington. Bad as it is, it is better for us to have somebody else imperialize over them than to do it ourselves. Gentlemen, I thank you. [Loud applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask that the three min-ntes be yielded now to the gentleman from Mississippi. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that there is only a minute and a quarter remaining.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee.

I ask that that time be yielded to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, of course, in the very limited time allowed for debate on this, a very important measure, I can not hope to take up and discuss it in detail as I would be glad to do, but must content myself to only notice it in a general way. Although, according to its title, which is as follows: "A bill temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands," one would at a glance think that it was only a mere revenue bill, yet upon investigation it is easy to see its sweep and scope is much beyond that, for while it is true that it is for the purpose of raising revenue, yet the manner and the method which it adopts declares a policy and indicates the intentions and views of the party in power.

Its policy and its enactments, in my judgment, are at variance with all the traditions of the country for more than a century, contrary to the provisions of the Constitution on the question of uniformity, as it had been construed by an unbroken line of the decisions of the United States Supreme Court for more than a hundred years preceding the modern and recent decisions of that court, and totally opposed to the spirit and letter of that immor-tal document, the Declaration of Independence; a policy which, if carried to its logical and legitimate conclusions, overturns and subverts all the principles and policies of this Government. Though young in years, and of recent appearance on the floor of this House, yet, being just a plain old-fashioned Democrat, who be-lieves that the Constitution and Declaration of Independence are still the emblems of liberty and the foundation of all good government, and that they mean what they say and say what they mean, and that they are still the greatest documents ever conceived by mortal man or written for the uplifting of humanity, I venture to sound the alarm before the Congress goes too far in its wild, reckless, and iniquitous schemes of colonization and empire.

Let us rather go back to the ancient landmarks and travel the plain and safe paths marked out and traversed by our fathers. Let us rather remember their sacrifices and hardships from Bunker Hill to Yorktown, and be true to them, to our country, and to ourselves, by being true to their doctrines and teachings, as embodied in the two immortal instruments to which I have referred, which were then, and still are, ablaze with the spirit of liberty and the undying principles of free government. You may strike them down, but "truth crushed to earth will rise again," but I fear it will never rise until the grand old Democratic party—the party of truth-shall again be in the ascendency.

I believe this measure is fraught with danger, and I can not, so far as I am concerned, give my consent to its passage, and hence will emphasize my opposition by voting against it, and thus voice the sentiment of the people whom I have the distinquished honor to represent on this floor, a noble contituency, who believe such measures as this one are not only contrary to the traditions of the party to which they belong, and of which I am an humble member, but are against the best interests of our beloved country. While it is true that under the modern and remarks his decisions.

While it is true that under the modern and remarkable decisions of the Supreme Court, which put a new and heretofore unheard of construction upon the provisions of the Constitution, this bill can technically be said to be constitutional; but let us remember that the decisions are virtually pronounced to be the law by the shifting of one of the judges, and each one of the decisions is by a divided court of 5 to 4. If one judge is to make the law, what is the necessity to have nine? Have a Supreme Court of one man instead of nine men, and let him make a new Constitution by the easy and adjustable means of construction whenever so-called "new phases and conditions" may arise.

It is, at best, to be regretted that these great and vital and momentous questions, the greatest for many decades, should have been determined by a divided court of 5 to 4. Would they had clung to the precedents which have added a halo of glory to the jurisprudence of our country and blazed the highway of our civilization and made us a great people and a wonderful nation, meriting and receiving the admiration of the world. But looking at the question presented by this bill from the standpoint that its constitutionality has been and is settled, and in view of the fact that all these remarkable decisions are virtually the decision of one judge against the precedents of a century, I propound the inquiry, Is it good policy? Is it expedient? "All things which are lawful are not expedient."

It is proposed by this bill to tax all imports and exports between the United States and the Philippines. It fixes taxes upon Philippine goods coming from the islands to the United States and goods. going from the United States to the islands. As an old darkey down in my country named George Warren, when descanting on the virtues of his coon trap, said, "Why, boss, hit ketches 'em er gwine 'an er comin'." This bill "ketches" American and Philippine products "er gwine an' er comin'." [Applause.]

This is not just, neither is it right. "Let justice be done though the heavens fall." This bill is full of injustice, inequalities, and discriminations. No wonder the Filipinos have been in a state of purpose and revolt ever since this Government proposed to control unrest and revolt ever since this Government proposed to control

unrest and revolt ever since this Government proposed to control the islands. It was asserted here on this floor yesterday, by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], that "At the close of the war with Spain we found not only Spain at our feet, but we found the Philippine Islands there."

Oh, no, my friend, the Philippine Islands have never been at our feet, but for most of the time, if not all of the time, they have been up in arms against us, and instead of loving us they hate us.
Instead of coming to us by choice and in good will, we bought them without their consent and have held them over their protest. It is true that they joined forces with ours in the centure test. It is true that they joined forces with ours in the capture of the city of Manila, but it is also true that they were then promised or at least made to believe that when Spain was driven from the islands they would be given their independence. With that understanding they became our allies, and when we failed to keep faith with them, or rather when the Republican party failed to keep faith with them, they became and are yet at heart our enemies. Only this morning I picked up a copy of the Washington Times, and in it I found the following, which I read:

Among the officials at the War Department no surprise is evinced at the reports from Manila that General Chaffee fears at any time a general uprising of natives. Notwithstanding the apparent quietude prevailing for the past few months, with occasional outbreaks at isolated places in the archipelago, General Chaffee thoroughly realizes the possibility of once again having to contend with organized resistance to American supremacy. The War Department had been made cognizant of this probable contingency.

With the exception of General Corbin, all the general officers of the Army on duty at the War Department who recently visited the Philippines returned immediately, but with the belief that the feeling of unfriendliness between the Americans and the Filipinos was becoming stronger, rather than decreasing.

As a result of General Chaffee's confidential reports, and information obtained personally by Secretary Root from Army officers recently returned from the Philippines, it has been decided not to make any reduction in forces now under General Chaffee's command.

NO REGIMENTS TO RETURN.

NO REGIMENTS TO RETURN.

A recent dispatch received from General Chaffee says that, in his opinion, it would be unwise for any of the regiments under orders to return home to leave, pending the arrival from the United States of organizations of equal strength. Just now the advisability of increasing the force in the islands is being seriously considered, although it is still hoped that such action will not be necessary.

Army officers, as a rule, are of the opinion that the establishment of civil authority in the Philippines was a trifle premature.

A general officer who has been on duty in the Philippines for more than two years, in a personal letter to a friend in Washington, received this morning, expresses the opinion that an army of 50,000 will be needed in the islands for at least five years.

Does that look like they are our friends? Does that look like they are at our feet? Nay, verily; as usual, they are up in arms against us, and General Chaffee thinks it unwise for any of the soldiers to leave, and "just now the advisability of increasing the force in the islands is being seriously considered." Thus it the force in the islands is being seriously considered." Thus it will ever be until we do that which we ought to do—give them their independence. But when that is proposed by the Democratic party our friends on the other side say: "No, we must be a philanthropist; we must govern them whether they consent or not, or whether they desire us to do so or not, because they are ignorant and incapable of self-government," and then berate us of the South because we do not want to be ruled by ignorance and vice, and because we prefer to be governed by intelligence and virtue.

In this bill they announce the doctrine that a people who, in the opinion of the Republican party, can not govern themselves shall be governed; and in their government of this people they deny them the right of "habeas corpus" and "trial by jury," while we give to all the people of the South, regardless of "race, color, or previous condition of servitude," all their civil rights before the law, the right of "habeas corpus" and "trial by jury," and the equal right to vote, when each qualifies himself according to law; and we tax ourselves to give to each and all a free and to law; and we tax ourselves to give to each and all a free education to thus qualify him.

What more could or would be demanded of us? "Equal rights to all and special privileges to none" is guaranteed when all have the same rights before the law. Then when we do that you should not condemn us when you are denying to these people their civil rights and more. "First pluck the beam out of thine own eye." Give these people their own government and independence, and remove slavery from the Sulu Islands, and let the restrictions on the free exercise of the elective franchise in all the pendence, and remove slavery from the Sulu Islands, and let the restrictions on the free exercise of the elective franchise in all the Northern States be removed, before you censure the South for contending that the white man shall control, and that intelligence, honor, integrity, and the descendants of the people who founded this country and made it great shall control in preference to ignorance, vice, crime, and the descendants of those who were sold to us and then taken from a large and the descendants. were sold to us and then taken from us by overpowering force of arms without compensation. [Applause.]

The "grandfather clause" and the constitutions adopted in some of the Southern States have been referred to several times in the course of this debate. Let me say that the people of the South had the "race problem" thrust upon them at a time when they were least able to contend with it, at a time when their beyone had been devented their leads held. homes had been devastated, their lands laid waste, their property destroyed, and their wealth taken from them; but with brave hearts and sturdy hands they faced the lamentable conditions then existing, and out of the ashes of destruction they have in a large measure restored their homes, caused their lands to blossom again, accumulated property, and amassed at least a competency, if not wealth, and are, as proven in the Spanish-American war, loyal to the flag, devoted to our great country, and true patriots of an "indissoluble Union of indestructible States." All friction is fast disappearing, and the peaceable means of the law is being used to bring about a condition for the good of all—a condition best for all the people, best for the States, and best for the nation, and no good can possibly come from investigating the causes for this condition, for that would but open up questions which I trust are long since settled and settled forever, and which are now behind us. Let us rather turn to the future and fix our eyes on the "day star" ahead of us, and earnestly labor and conscientiously work for the accomplishment of conservations. work for the accomplishment of one great purpose, and let that purpose be the development and uplifting of all of our common purpose be the development and uplifting of all of our common country, and let none stop to ask from whence comes any request for material aid and development, but only ask is it a fair, honest, and just appeal, and if so, then let us respond, and always let the watchword be progress, the purpose unity, the end the welfare of our beloved country, the greatest and most influential nation now in all the universe. God bless it and preserve it, and in the language of that great chieftain I would say, "Let us have peace." Stir not up the dying embers, destroy not the benign influence exercised by the warm-hearted and now much-lamented McKinley, but deliver us from strife, sectionalism, and prejudice, and exercised by the warm-hearted and now inuch-lamented mckin-ley, but deliver us from strife, sectionalism, and prejudice, and cement us all together in brotherly love and good will, and let us all stand beneath the folds of the "Stars and the Stripes." Then will this nation reach the zenith of her glory and her people enjoy their greatest happiness. [Applause.] Leave the South alone "to work out her own salvation" in this matter, and she will take the wisest again of all her resplacible to the send the messenger of take the wisest care of all her people; but send the messenger of discord within her borders or unnecessarily interfere with her local affairs, and you will find her men and her women genuine Anglo-Saxons, true Americans, noble sons and daughters of their illustrious fathers and mothers, and they, like them, believe in the superiority of the white race and in their right to rule, and they never apologize for principle, and no possibility of anticipated hardships will deter them. pated hardships will deter them from contending for what they conceive to be right, and they will maintain it by every lawful means. May good will and friendship abide while all of us together work out a most transcendent destiny for this, the greatest of all republics.

Now, in conclusion I ask what shall be done with these Philippine people? Give them their independence, after they have established a government of their own, reserving such naval and tablished a government of their own, reserving such naval and coaling stations as we desire and say to the nations of earth, hands off, let them alone. If they could be made to believe that we would do that, we would have no further trouble with them. It has been said that we are educating them and doing much for them. That may be true, but the Filipino, as well as the American, loves liberty, and he does not want "philanthropy" that is conferred with a smiling face but which is accompanied by a smiting and tyrannical hand. We have gone far enough with this folly and should see the error of our way and he into the return of our way. this folly and should see the error of our way and be just rather than generous. These islands during the year 1901 have put us to the expense of $100,000,000 in round numbers. We have only received from them in all since we have occupied them up to date the sum of $17,225,000. Hence the total receipts fall short of the expenditures for one year the enormous sum of $82,775,000.

How is that for financiering? The total value of merchandise How is that for financiering? The total value of merchandise exported from and imported into the islands during the year 1901 is $53,494,354, and of this amount the United States only participated to the amount of $5,427,706, while the other nations secured $48,066,648 of this trade, and did not bear one copper of the expense. Assuming that our people made a net profit of 20 per cent of our trade, our profits for the year 1901 would be only $1,085,541, and our expenses for the year 1901 have been in round numbers $100,000,000 leaving as a clear loss of $98,914,459. All those expenses for the year 1901 was a clear loss of $98,914,459. $100,000,000, leaving us a clear loss of $98,914,459. All these expenses have been paid by taxes collected from our own people. At that rate how long would it take us to get even? Have we not oppressed our own people long enough in the interest of the Filipino?

pended many precious lives and are daily expending more. Many a vacant chair makes gloomy a home and makes sad many a heart, and I say here and now that I would not give the life of one and I say here and now that I would not give the life of one noble, generous, stalwart, brave, and chivalrous American boy for all the Filipinos and their islands, and the Sultan of Sulu thrown in for good measure. [Applause.] No, no, my friends, we do not need them, and as was said by my distinguished colleague, Mr. DE ARMOND, of Missouri, "we acquired them in folly; let us dispose of them in wisdom." Let us hurry to make them happy and hasten to relieve our own people of this "incubus" by civilw them their independence as soon as possible. I had rather giving them their independence as soon as possible. I had rather see the gentlemen on the other side reducing the taxes on our own people in preference to levying taxes on the Filipinos. I had rather see them restoring silver and gold—the money of the Constitution—to its constitutional rights, so as the people may have more of it with which to pay taxes. I had rather see them taking steps to destroy the trusts of our own country than strength ing steps to destroy the trusts of our own country than strengthening the trusts in the Philippines, and I had rather see them reechoing the sentiments of the founders of this Government than imposing "taxation without representation;" and I warn them now that while they will thrust this law upon the Filipinos, because they have the power, yet before the bar of the American people they must appear, and I appeal to them and to their sense of truth and justice to right this wrong and thereby vindicate the "fathers of the nation" and the "founders of this Republic."

[Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope my friend will not object.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the gentleman will yield to me for two minutes, I will say to him whether I will or will not withdraw my objection.

Mr. PAYNE. I will not do that. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, if what gentlemen on the other side have said in regard to this bill is true, or if any considerable portion of it is true, then this is a most important occa-Without reference to the declarations that they have made it is important. It is important in this view of the subject dis-It is important. It is important in this view of the subject discussed. Here is a question that is receiving the attention of the people of this country almost universally and occupying the attention of many people living outside of our jurisdiction, involving matters of constitutional power, matters that are fundamental in regard to the rights of man, matters pertaining to our commercial economy, and yet here are a hundred and fifty of the people's representatives who say that a great wrong is to be accomplished, that we are at the dividing of the ways, so to speak, of national policy, and yet not one of them has vouchsafed any plan, any remedy, any method to avoid this great peril they say is now impending.

You gentlemen are silent in your seats, except when you berate the majority with censorious criticism. No constructive sentences of policy have come from you. You have even consented, tences of policy have come from you. You have even consented, possibly with a purpose, of keeping from yourselves every possibility of amendment to the method under which the House is considering this bill. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee arose in his place yesterday and asked for an order relating to the manner of considering this great measure. The manner proposed you might have declaimed against as arbitrary, tyrannical, subversive of the complete deliberation and perfection of this bill. It cut off from you all right of amountment. of this bill. It cut off from you all right of amendment. It prevented you from giving your voice in formal manner to perfecting the legislation here, and you accepted it. The gentleman's proposition was agreed to by unanimous consent. Every Democrat consented that he might be deprived of the right of giving his plan for the solution of this great difficulty. Was there method in this? Were you anxious to escape responsibility? Were you trying to hide? It would seem so.

You gentlemen insist in your declamations that the Philippine Islands are not a part of the United States; that therefore the right of migration from there here and here there exists. You dare not attempt to crystallize that thought in legislation. Why? Because if you enacted such law you throw down all the barriers that exist between our protected labor and our laborers and the millions of people that would come here within a few months or a few years to take the places of our laborers. You dare not propose that, in view of the labor organizations of the country, and therefore you are glad to hide behind this resolution that cuts you off from proposing that as law. You are content to talk individually, but you are afraid to act. [Applause on the Republican side.

Mr. Chairman, gentlemen have declaimed loudly with reference to the interests of the tobacco States of the Union. No one of these gentlemen dares to say that he is in favor of allowing the tobacco products of Porto Rico and Cuba and the Philippine Islands free access to the markets of the United States. Is not that another reason why some of you gentlemen were silent and content to be stifled and prevented from expressing yourselves in a formal way that would live upon this question? I was glad to see that our brother from Louisiana [Mr. Robertson] saw the difficulty and jumped the job. [Laughter.] He could not be content to be silent on the matter. You other gentlemen are entirely unwilling to commit yourselves in his way.

Mr. Chairman I was very much struck with the borter propose.

Mr. Chairman, I was very much struck with the barter propo sition of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. He thinks we could relieve ourselves from all embarrassment by "trading" these islands to some other power. Does not that "trading" these islands to some other power. Does not that admit that we own them? Does he belong—surely not—to that class of jockeys that would trade that which was not his? Again, that implies, and it is the equivalent of, a sale of these people and these islands. And yet the gentleman says we have no rightful control over them. Gentlemen tell us the Filipinos are men; if we govern them, we must have their consent. Before we can rightfully exercise any power over them at all we must have their consent. The Declaration of Independence, they say, is in the way of our otherwise controlling them, and they quote: "We the way of our otherwise controlling them, and they quote: "We hold these truths to be self-evident that all men are created equal and endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, among them life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

And yet the gentlemen tell us that we have the right to sell men to that power that we select, without regard to their consent, and in face of the fact that God has given them inalienable rights, those that they can not alienate or another take from them because they come from the great Creator of us all, who has endowed us with all our faculties and all blessings.

It seems to me that the logic of these gentlemen is somewhat out of joint. I remember a time when they used to construe the Declaration of Independence somewhat differently. [Laughter

Forty years ago the Declaration of Independence was invoked by another school of politicians for another purpose. It was then invoked, and insisted that black men had some rights, and they told us that the Declaration of Independence in its broadest scope and meaning was limited to white men; that when Jefferson penned these immortal words he meant "white" men, and that when Washington read the Declaration of Independence in its broadest scope and meaning was limited to white men; that when Jefferson penned these immortal words he meant "white" men, and that when Washington read the Declaration of Independence in general orders in the presence of his tattered regiments on Long Island he meant white men. They say he must have meant white men, because at that time Jefferson owned 70 slaves and Washington was the largest slaveholder in the United States. They must have given some other construction to the words "all men.

Possibly these gentlemen are ready to stand by the position that resistory these gentlement are ready to stand by the position that the abolitionist took at that time, for I notice that one gentleman yesterday spoke of the "little brown men" as being entitled to the full benefit of this splendid idea. I wondered, as I listened to him, how long it would be before the black men in the South would have the benefit of even the grandfather clause in the new constitutions of some of the State. constitutions of some of the States. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the policy of this bill is right. I make a distinction, and I think we have always made a distinction in this country, between the people who occupied and resided upon acquired territory and the original territory in the United States or of the States that might be created therefrom. I lived for six years on acquired territory of the United States. I was a citizen of Iowa six years before it became one of the States

I remember the fact that at one period the governor of that Territory came from the State of Kentucky. Another time the governor came from the State of Tennesse; another time from the State of Ohio. I remember that of the judges who dispensed the State of Onio. I remember that of the judges who dispensed justice throughout the length and breadth of the Territory one came from Pennsylvania; one came from New York; one came from the Carolinas. I remember that all of our sheriffs, clerks, and county officers were appointed by appointees of the President of the United States. I remember that every law enacted by our legislature was subject to revision by Congress, and could be annulled at pleasure. There was no sovereignty exercised by the people of Iowa there; there was no self-government. The measure of self-government accorded to us was less than is accorded to the Porto Rican and Filipino to-day under our laws. [Ap-

And I remember, too, that this was in good old Democratic times. John Tyler appointed some of those judges and governors; James K. Polk appointed others. Those Presidents were authorized to do this by legislation enacted by Democratic Congresses. And if the people of Iowa, who were emigrants from the older States—men who had been accustomed all their lives and for generations to self-government—familiar with legisla-tion, with the preparation and drafting of laws and their execu-tion—if those men, according to the Democrats of that period, were not capable of self-government, how much less are these people away out in the Philippine Islands, who have been the creatures of oppression all their lives, who have no familiarity with government or legislation—how much less are they fitted for self-government?

I have been somewhat perplexed by the varying and discordant statements of gentlemen. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Shafroth] argued that because there were a few intelligent and cultivated gentlemen of Filipino blood, therefore those people are capable of self-government. I do not think that he meant that exactly. After hearing that statement I was somewhat perturbed by hearing the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Thayer] say that the low classes are always governed; that the high classes make the laws in all countries. These seem to me to be somewhat perplexing statements coming from Democratic sources. I do not believe those people are capable of self-government—why? Because I know that all good government is a growth, an evolution. It required more than nine hundred years to bring the civilization of the British Isles to its present status. It required more than eleven centuries to bring the Empire founded by Charlemagne to the present status of the French people.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the gentleman believe that the Filipinos are as capable of self-government as are the Cubans?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then, do you believe we ought to recognize the independence of the Cubans?

the independence of the Cubans?

Mr. HEPBURN. I believe that the Democratic party forced Mr. HEPBURN. I believe that the Democratic party forced the Administration into a position, undesired by it and undesired by the Republican party, of so recognizing them. We did not want to do it. You forced it. [Applause and laughter on Democratic side.] Oh, you may applaud, gentlemen; but I have an idea that before a decade of years has passed you will see the unwisdom of intrusting the Cubans with the full power of self-government. I think those people must have some period of

Why, sir, look at our own experience. The New England people and the people of most of the Southern colonies had been The New England accustomed to self-government for years prior to 1775. They had had the management of their own finances; they had levied their own taxes and expended them; they had cared for their schools, such as existed; they were accustomed to all the different forms of domestic government then prevailing; yet with all their experience, with all their knowledge, and with their lineage and environment, it required fifteen years before they could frame a constitutional government, and probably it would have required a much longer period but for the environment of nations and the hostility on the part of some that compelled them to forego or compose differences in order to secure some common plan for the launching of the new State.

Some gentlemen who have spoken during this debate have said that the Philippine Islands are worthless to us, and they have adverted to the commercial conditions existing there now and which have existed in times past as proof to show that the alleged commercialism animating the Republican party is to be disappointed. Mr. Chairman, in considering the worth of these islands to us, now is not the time to make up the judgment. I could fancy that in 1803 some gentlemen might have made—in fact, they did make—the same argument against the consummation of the purchase of the Louisiana country. Men looking then over those broad, uninhabited prairies—looking at the barren mountains to the westward, looking to the swamps of the Lower Mississippi, to the sparse settlement in that region, numbering less than 10,000 white wear in all the territory looking to the savages 500,000. white men in all the territory, looking to the savages, 500,000 strong, bloodthirsty, merciless—they would have said, as do gentlemen here now, "These broad areas are valueless to us."

But I fancy that Thomas Jefferson and those men who were potential in helping him to carry out his ideas of acquisition looked with prophetic vision beyond their own time. They projected their gaze a hundred years into the future, and they saw the magnificent State of Missouri, with its peerless city of nearly 1,000,000 people; Iowa and Minnesota and Arkansas and Colorado and all the other States that have been formed from that rado and all the other States that have been formed from that territory. They saw those States populated with millions of intelligent, brave, industrious people, the creators of fabulous millions of wealth; men who have builded homes more comfortable, presenting more of the spirit of homes, than can be found anywhere else in the world outside of the Federal Union. [Applause.] It was a vision of this kind that the statesman of that day, looking into the future saws and it was this that induced these more ing into the future, saw; and it was this that induced those men to spend their then precious millions in order to secure the possi-

So too, I fancy, the statesman of the present day will project is vision—it may be a hundred years—into the future. If he his vision—it may be a hundred years—into the future. If he does, what will he see? Those 10,000,000 people now inhabiting a scarcely cultivated area may then be 50,000,000—50,000,000 as the first time 50,000,000 people in the second people touched by the magic wand of civilization-50,000,000 people as they then may be when they are full of the spirit of this civilization, when they have learned to appreciate liberty, to civilization, when they have learned to appreciate liberty, to know what liberty is, to distinguish between liberty and license, when they have learned the lesson of industry and thrift, when they have acquired and multiplied their powers for accumulating wealth by the machinery that the genius of the American people has given them and to which their genius will have doubtless made large contributions. It is to that time that we are to look rather than to the now. It is that condition which we want to contemplate rather the semigrapers that now are there. are to contemplate rather the semisavages that now are there

Gentlemen on the other side have spoken of the demand of the people of those islands for liberty and equality, and in doing this they have assailed the conditions as they exist. I refer more particularly to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Shafroth]. When the gentleman makes these assertions I ask him for his credentials—whom does he speak for when he demands liberty for those people? Does he speak for the five and a half million people who are now aiding the American authorities in establishing government there? Is it for those people that he speaks? If not, is he speaking for the bandits—for the men who are resisting our authority; who are slaughtering our troops; who are butchering their own people; who are exhibiting all the ferocity of the most relentless savages? Whom do you speak for, and where are your credentials?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I speak for the people of the United States who love the Declaration of Independence. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Do you speak, then, for those who love that declaration with "all men" in it, or with the black man eliminated?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I speak for the American people who love that Declaration; for all men, irrespective of the question where they may be or who they may be. The existence in the Philippines of a war is something that is against any movement looking to their independence. As long as war continues there it is something that prevents the people taking up this question and considering it thoroughly. But when they stop, as they should stop this war, you will find that the American people will begin to realize the proper rights of men, and the interest of our Governrealize the proper rights of men, and the interest of our Government not to retain these distant colonies.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, if that be the view of the gentleman from Colorado

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hep-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] yield to his colleague?
Mr. HEPBURN. I do.
Mr. COUSINS. If that be the view of the gentleman from Colorado, will it then be a humane and great and patriotic thing to "swap off" those Philippine people for something in the near Pacific or near our country? [Applause.] Is that the view that will suit the idea of civilization that the gentleman espouses—that we should "trade off" those people as we would trade mules in Missouri or dogs in Iowa? Will that satisfy the gentleman's high ideals?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I never contended that we should swap anybody.

Mr. COUSINS. I refer to the argument of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND]. Mr. SHAFROTH. I supposed you were referring to my argument. Mr. COUSINS. Then you do not indorse the view of your Democratic colleague?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not. I simply say that even if that were the case, it would be no worse than buying people, as those people were bought in this instance.

Mr. HEPBURN. How much time have I remaining?
Mr. PAYNE. I hope the gentleman will be recognized for the balance of the nine minutes, reserving one hour to this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has ten minutes remaining.
Mr. DE ARMOND. I will just say, Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.
Mr. DE ARMOND. I will simply say that if the Kiplingesque gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COUSINS] had seen fit to interrupt me when I was speaking, or at a time when I had an opportunity to answer him, I would have endeavored to give him all he wanted answer him, I would have endeavored to give him all he wanted upon the question of trading mules in Missouri or dogs in Iowa. I certainly would rather trade mules in Missouri than dogs in Iowa. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COUSINS. I simply took the record of the gentleman's speech and interpreted it in its spirit.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Unlike those of the gentleman from Iowa

Mr. DE ARMOND. Unlike those of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Cousins], my speeches need no interpretations; they interpret themselves. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COUSINS. Evidently, to you.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Williams] did discover something in this bill that seemed pleasing to him, and he congratulated the Republican party upon the fact that there was a little bit of "uniformity" in this bill. Why, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman certainly has not been reading Republican literature and in the second control of th in this bill. Why, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman certainly has not been reading Republican literature and is not familiar with the history of that great party. For more than forty years it has been pursuing a uniform course in the upbuilding of this country, and in trying to help all other people. It has been uniform in its theories, in its practices, and in its results. Everywhere that it has had the power it has pursued that course of "uniformity" in the elevation of mankind and expecially any even parks.

had the power it has pursued that course of "uniformity" in the elevation of mankind, and especially our own people.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEPBURN. For a question, yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I happened to be in the cloakroom, but a friend informs me that the gentleman made an observation which is a pretty clear indication that he did not hear me very clearly when I was speaking.

Mr. HEPBURN. I simply referred, Mr. Chairman, to that sentence of the gentleman in which he thanked the Republican party for giving them a little bit of uniformity, even if it was no party for giving them a little bit of uniformity, even if it was no party for giving them a little bit of uniformity, even if it was no longer than his finger.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman is mistaken. Mr. HEPBURN. That is the sentence I am trying to discuss. Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman is mistaken. I said that I thanked the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Grosvenor] for that light in the clouds, and that I felt prepared to thank God whenever the Republican party did what the gentleman from Ohio indicated they might do.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman is sincere in that, and if his thanks are always returned in the orthodox way, the knees of his breeches must have been worn to shreds long ago. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

long ago. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Permit me to say, Mr. Chairman, that that has been my mental condition for quite a while, and I have lived in slavish obedience to the general practice, and I and I have lived in slavish obedience to the general practice, and I find upon inspection that the knees of my breeches are quite untouched. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I care not whether the gentleman from Mississippi was thanking the gentleman from Ohio or the Republican party. So far as I have had the pleasure of observing the gentleman from Ohio in his utterances, I would say that very largely they run upon a plane. He, I know, is one of those who, in conjunction with these gentlemen around me, has at all times been insistent upon this great uplifting idea of the Republican party.

Look at the condition of the laboring people of the United States to-day, due to this persistent, consistent effort on the part of the party all the time to elevate labor, to make it more dignified, to improve the condition of laborers, a condition that you gentlemen over there recognize, that you dare not assail by declaring it to be your belief that the Filipinos have the right of migration and may come to the United States at will. Do you believe that, gentlemen? Will some one of you talk about it, if you do? If you have a resolution embodying that "liberty-loving" thought, so in harmony with the Declaration of Independing" thought, so in harmony with the Declaration of Independence, so completely on all fours with the belief that all men are created equal and that all men are endowed, and so forth, with the right of liberty to come and to go where they please, will you not put that in the form of an amendment offered by authority on your side? I undertake to say that the chairman of the comon your side? I undertake to say that the chairman of the committee will in some way or another manage to get consent for its consideration. [Applause on the Republican side.]

But you do not want that. Now, gentlemen, I have but a word more to say, and that is to enforce the ideas that I have advanced—that you can not reason, consistently with your professions of reverence for the Declaration of Independence, for the equality of men, for the universal rights of human liberty, when you tall us have colomnly that we have the right as a great Govern. tell us here solemnly that we have the right as a great Government to sell 9,000,000 people without their consent, without the right on their part to select their future master, even.

Why, I am told in the old days of slavery that it was then regarded as the right of a slave to have some choice as to who should be his future master. When exigencies came, when poverty and distress made it necessary to sell a favored slave, that slave, I am told, under a custom that was almost universal, was told of the necessity and given an opportunity to select as far as he could the master to whom he was to be sold. The gentleman from Colorado, in his excessive humanity and veneration for the declarations of the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence, has failed to make a request for a provision of that kind. it not be humane? Suppose we were to sell them to the Turk; under the broad terms of the gentleman's proposition we ought to sell them to the Turk. We ought to sell— Mr. SHAFROTH. I did not say I would sell them at all, but give them their liberty and independence. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Why, you talked of trading them off.
Mr. SHAFROTH. I never talked about disposing of them ex-

Mr. HEPBURN. You said "dispose."
Mr. SHAFROTH. No, sir; I said give them their liberty and independence; help them establish a government and give them their liberty. [Applause on the Democratic side.]
Mr. MERCER. I would say, in reply to the gentleman from Colorado, that I did not find any prominent Filipino in the Philippine Islands who wants independence. He wants protection.
Mr. SHAFROTH. It is not for the Filipino, but because it overtures the very principles of our Government, that we desire overturns the very principles of our Government, that we desire it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HEPBURN. If that is true, does not the gentleman think that the principles of our Government have been overturned so often that perhaps we can take another turn or so without any great loss? [Laughter on the Republican side.] They were overturned in Louisiana; they were overturned when the Territory of Missouri was established, when Arkansas was established, when Iowa was established, when Minnesota was established, and all the other Territories. These overturnings have occurred so often, and it has been found in the other territories. the other Territories. These overturnings have occurred so often, and it has been found up to this time that they are so harmless, that I should think it is nothing but a nightmare that could ever interpose to disturb the gentleman or threaten peril yet in store.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield fifteen minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL].

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, as I find I can not vote for this bill, I think it but right that I should make a statement of my pull, I think it but right that I should make a statement of my reasons for not supporting it. I have been very much interested in the eloquent speech of the gentleman from Iowa, as I always am. I agree thoroughly with him in this matter that it is a wicked thing to buy or to sell men, or to buy or sell a people, and I would like to know if we have not done that very thing in connection with the people of the Philippine Islands. Did we not buy them of Spain? Did we consult them and see whether they desired us to become their new master? And the very thing that the gentleman justly repudiates and resents that has been adthe gentleman justly repudiates and resents that has been advanced by some gentlemen here that we should sell these people applies to the action of this Government when we consented to

The pending bill involves the identical constitutional questions raised by the Payne Act, imposing the tariffs in the case of Porto Rico. A series of cases arising under that act have been decided by the Supreme Court, which has held that Congress had the constitutional power to pass it. I can easily understand how a Representative might refrain from voting to exercise a power which he believed existed, but which the Supreme Court had decided did not exist. The question is a different one where a Representative sworn to observe the Constitution is asked to vote to exercise a power he believes upon his oath Congress does not possess. While this question is not of final consequence to me in regard to this bill, I will read to you what Abraham Lincoln said in this connection:

I have expressed heretofore and I now repeat my opposition to the Dred Scott decision, but I should be allowed to state the nature of that opposition, and I ask your indulgence while I do so. What is fairly implied by the term Judge Douglas, has used, "resistance to the decision?" I do not resist it. If I wanted to take Dred Scott from his master I would be interfering with property, * * But I am doing no such thing as that. All that I am doing is refusing to obey it as a political rule. If I were in Congress and a vote should come up on the question whether slavery should be prohibited in a new Territory, in spite of the Dred Scott decision I should vote that it should.

In other words, he would vote, in defiance of the court, to exercise a power the court had declared did not exist. Or, let me cite Charles Sumner, who said in the United States Senate, referring to the same decision:

The Senator from Maryland invoked the Dred Scott decision as a reason why Congress should not recognize colored persons as citizens. In reply I simply asserted the right of Congress to interpret the Constitution without constraint from the Supreme Court, and this I now repeat. Each branch of the Government must interpret the Constitution according to its own sense of obligation they have all taken. And God forbid that Congress should consent to wear the strait-jacket of the Dred Scott case.

Or, not to multiply citations of individual opinions, as I might easily do, let me refer you to the Republican platform itself in 1860, which declared, in defiance of the decision of the Supreme Court, that the Constitution carried freedom and not slavery into the Territories. That was the central issue in that great campaign in which Abraham Lincoln was elected President of the United States.

I will notice in passing the remark of my distinguished and very eloquent friend from Ohio yesterday to the effect that in that eloquent friend from Ohio yesterday to the effect that in that campaign of 1860 "proprio vigore" was annihilated in the triumph of the Republican party. There was "proprio vigore" upon both sides. The Republicans held that the Constitution carried freedom into the Territories, and their application of "proprio vigore" won. I may add that, if we follow the opinions of eight of the nine justices in the insular cases, there is still a good deal of "proprio vigore" left the Constitution.

The decisions of the court are absolutely final in the cases before it, but I trust that before anyone claims for judicial opinions a binding character as authority for even the court itself he will reflect that he may be impugning the action of the court, which has more than once reversed its own opinions. In these very insular cases the majority of the justices showed a scant courtesy to at least two opinions of their predecessors upon the same bench, rendered a generation apart from each other, and in each case con-curred in by a unanimous court. I have the utmost respect for the Supreme Court, but it is entirely compatible with that respect to scrutinize their opinions and to consider for a moment the division among the justices and the general character of their decision. Obviously in the time alloted me it is impossible to attempt a review of the cases.

How did the court stand upon the constitutional questions involved by the Payne Act? By the narrowest possible majority—by five to four—the court upheld the act. This is an important consideration in fixing upon its weight as a precedent. And it must be remembered that four of the five justices expressed the opinion that the fifth justice in deciding with them assumed a position inconsistent with that taken by the same justice in another decision promulgated by him on the same day. One learned justice went so far as to say that the two positions were irreconcilable. If his positions were irreconcilable, who shall say which one was right and which was wrong?

It may therefore fairly be said that upon these questions which involve our power to make the people of the Philippine Islands mere chattels without a country, to confer upon them a bastard, common-law citizenship, and cynically to force upon them a cruel commercial isolation, the court stands with four and a half justices ranged upon one side and four and a half upon the other.

Place the substance of the two constitutional decisions side by side. In construing the terms "State" and "United States" in the Constitution the court held that goods are not exported when they are sent from a "State" to Porto Rico, and yet that they are imported when they are brought from Porto Rico to the "United States." Let him who can explain to the common mind how it is possible for the "United States" to be in any conceivable case less than the sum of all the "States."

And so we have seen Porto Rico "winding in and winding out,"

And so we have seen Porto Rico "winding in and winding out," according as the requirements of the Payne law demanded. In justice to four of the majority of the court it must be said that they attempt to ward off an inference from their decision that Congress has despotic power or that it can govern free from the limitations of the Constitution. But that, I submit, is purely gratuitous. The question presented to the court was whether a specific constitutional limitation applied to Congress in governing territory. The court held that the limitation in question did not apply, and its decision will be cited as a direct authority hereafter apply, and its decision will be cited as a direct authority hereafter whenever it may be again proposed in any so-called national exigency to break down any of the other great dikes which have been built up to prevent the waters of despotism from submerging the landmarks of constitutional freedom.

The minority opinions of the Chief Justice and his three associates are consistent, are framed upon the purest models of our constitutional government, and are worthy of the brightest days of American jurisprendence. Who then can doubt that there will constitutional government, and are worthy of the brightest days of American jurisprudence. Who, then, can doubt that there will be those, even wise judges, hereafter who will still follow the flaming torch of John Marshall and of the dissenting justices of the present court rather than the flickering and uncertain taper which marks the opposite path.

But even if it were a certainty that a future court would hold the bill to be constitutional I disbelieve so profoundly in our Philipping policy that I should be mable to give it my support

Philippine policy that I should be unable to give it my support. It takes a long step in a direction opposite to that in which, in my It takes a long step in a direction opposite to that in which, in my opinion, our honor and interests require that we should travel. What are some of the undeniable developments of our policy which we have seen in the last three years? We have witnessed what I must be pardoned for calling the solemn farce of four or five very estimable American gentlemen sitting as a legislature over ten millions of people of whose language, customs, conditions, and existence they were probably ignorant four years ago. We have witnessed the spectacle of an American army, at times numbering over 70,000 men, engaged in conquering a people on the other side of the globe, struggling for the independence of their country. We have seen our highest court apparently forgetful that this nation was established as a protest against the power of one people to tax permanently another people, declaring Congress to be exempt from the constitutional limitation upon the great central power of taxation in dealing with American tensities and thus ones the way for authorities government and the great central power of taxation in dealing with American territory, and thus open the way for autocratic government and for the exploitation of subject peoples. We have in that brief time seen our permanent standing Army multiplied more than threefold and the expense of our military establishment approach that of the most army-ridden nations of Europe.

We have seen ourselves take a position highly inconsistent in point of justice with the Monroe doctrine when, demanding that the Governments of the overcrowded Eastern Continent shall keep their hands off from this hemisphere, we overly see with home keep their hands off from this hemisphere, we ourselves, with hundreds of millions of untilled acres and vast untouched forests, seize at one stroke a thousand islands in the other hemisphere. Boasting, as we could proudly boast, that we were invulnerable Boasting, as we could proudly boast, that we were invulnerable against attack, buttressed between the two great oceans, we have leaped to the Antipodes and we invite attack by immensely increasing the chances of its success. If four years ago a writer of burlesque opera had put these things in a play, he would have stood apart and alone in his profession as the consummate creator of impossible situations. And yet these fantastic things have within a little more than three years been written in our history. I believe now, as I have always believed, that when our commissioners set their hands to the treaty annexing the Philippine Islands they inaugurated as infatuated a policy as any upon which

Islands they inaugurated as infatuated a policy as any upon which a great nation ever embarked. They crossed a vastly larger and a more portentious Rubicon. It is a policy which has been chiefly responsible for the results to which I have referred. It is a policy which has been followed by the destruction by us of tens of thouand who were lured by the light flashed by our own glorious history across the Pacific to fight for their freedom and their homes. It was a policy, too, as a result of which thousands upon thousands of the sons of American mothers will sleep their last sleep when the banks of the Pacific to fight for their freedom and their homes.

sands or the sons or American mothers will sleep their last sleep upon the banks of the Rio Grande and the Pasig.

I know it is said that it will give us commerce. Our trade with those islands appears to-day to have reached the magnificent proportions of the trade of a corner grocery, But if it should promise to bring to this country all the wealth of the Indies, I believe that our national honor, the preservation in their integrity of republications are full transparent and safety cover distance of in can institutions, our future peace and safety, every dictate of interest and justice, demand that we shall now so shape our steps that we may return again to the God of our fathers.

A people are to be taxed and their money spent by another people 10,000 miles away. Could ingenuity devise a scheme better calculated to produce the grossest corruption?

Sir, if we must legislate for those islands, it does not comport with my ideas of justice or humanity that we should begin by making all their ports and shores to bristle with tariffs against the world, denying them even any community of trade with their new master, while we rudely snap the ties that bind them to the old. Give them by statute at least something of that which within one of a majority of the justices of the Supreme Court decided was theirs to demand as of right under the organic laws of this nation. [Loud applause.]

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, during the progress of this debate I have listened to a great many instructive and eloquent speeches from both sides of the House. The thought has, however, suggested itself to my mind that some of these speeches have been of so lofty an order of sentiment as to have quite disappeared from the view of everyday mortals in the clouds of pure theory, leaving behind on earth the real, practical questions involved. In the few minutes that I have reserved of my time I shall discuss this bill from the practical and not the sentimental standpoint.

I am in absolute accord with my party associates in the hope I am in absolute accord with my party associates in the hope that ultimately, under Democratic auspices, when the Filipinos have learned to govern themselves and are fit to stand alone, the United States will grant them independence. Unfortunately, a Democratic Administration is not in power, and the Republican party has no intention of granting Philippine independence either now or in the future. To treat the Philippine question as though independence were an immediate possible solution is like basing one's hope of to-night's dinner on the irridescent but unsubstantial heapties of a soap bubble. tial beauties of a soap bubble.

Much as we may regret it, much as we may deplore it, much as we may hope that some day, in a Democratic millennium, we may undo the harm that has been done, the facts are that we have a colonial system and that we have colonies. As sensible men, as wise legislators, it is our duty to face the situation.

Under the recent decisions of the Supreme Court there can be no doubt as to the constitutionality of this bill. It must be con-sidered, first, with reference to our duty to the American people, and second, with reference to our duty to the Filipinos, to whom and second, with reference to our duty to the Finjinos, to whom we are under obligations of our own seeking. It is for us to determine how the task we have gratuitously and unnecessarily undertaken may be accomplished with the least amount of sacrifice to the people of the several States and with the greatest amount of justice to the people of the archipelago.

The acquisition of the Philippine Islands was the most costly plunge ever made by a reckless gambler at the Monte Carlo of international politics

From the mere sordid standpoint of dollars and cents, it is the imperative duty of this Congress to do all in its power to stop the constant flow of blood and treasure from the United States to the Philippines. Our army of occupation will cost us for the coming year some $85,000,000. When the next year closes we will have expended for military purposes in the Far East alone nearly $500,000,000.

The only result that can follow the enactment of this bill is the still further widening of the breach that exists between the rulers and ruled; between the powers that prey and those who pay.

I have read with much interest and no little profit the annual report of our "Secretary of State for the Colonies," who incidentally holds at the present time the War Portfolio. That really able and brilliant man has succeeded in writing one of the most charming and attractive prospectuses ever produced by a colonial land agent or a promoter of personally conducted tours in foreign countries. It reads almost like a prose poem. After reading it one feels impelled to emigrate, or at least to spend the summer in a land which, if his descriptions are accurate, must be a perfect combination of paradise and purgatory—just enough of paradise to make it pleasant, just enough of purgatory to make it inter-

The secretary tells us that, with the aid of 43,000 American troops and 5,000 Philippine scouts, the work of pacification is progressing satisfactorily, and that local self-government is being everywhere established with the assistance, not of the Constitution to be sure, but with the assistance of American bayonets. In General MacArthur's report, which is attached to that of the secretary, we read a most pleasing story of the eagerness with which the children of the Philippines have assimilated 25,000 copies of Wentworth's Arithmetic, 10,000 copies of Little Nature Studies, and 10,000 copies of Thought Readers, and of their touching grati-

Some painters possess the knack of making the eyes of a portrait follow the spectator about the room. Our "Colonial Secretary" has so marvelous a technique that no matter from what point you may view it the eyes of his portrait of Peace in the Philippines look you straight in the face and tempt you to believe in their sincerity. He has used the brush of a Titian in painting a sign for the entrance to a cemetery. We are so enthralled by the genius of the master that for the moment at least we forget the dead who lie within.

Forty-three thousand regulars and 5,000 scouts, especially if reenforced by Thought Readers and Little Nature Studies, may accomplish the work of pacification in time, but it will be long after you and I have passed away and our memories been forgotten. Appeals to men's fears and intelligence, especially when the fears are acute and the intelligence is of the lowest, are never as effective as appeals to their physical welfare and prosperity.

By the terms of this bill you refuse any material help to the people we have taken under our control. You have quartered troops upon them and given them an unlimited supply of school books, but you have refused them food. You are perfectly willing to grant reciprocity to foreign countries, but you refuse any tariff concessions to what the Supreme Court has decided is a part of the United States.

Your justification for embarking this country upon a policy of colonialism was that it would open new markets for American products. You told us again and again on this floor and on the platform that the permanent retention of the Philippines would mean not only a vast increase in the commerce of this country, but that Manila would become the great center of commerce in the East in the hands of American merchants. And now, despite your solemn promise, you propose by this bill to close the markets of the Philippines to the people of the United States.

has only appreciably increased, and what there is of that merce is being rapidly and certainly absorbed by Great Britain and Germany.

During the past year, out of a total commerce, including both exports and imports from and to the Philippines, of $53,494,354, the total share of the United States was only $5,427,706, as against $48,066,648, the share of other countries, chief among whom were Great Britain and Germany. There is in the islands a vast field for the production of wealth and unlimited possibilities for the investment of American capital, if you permit American enterprise to obtain a foothold. But with the Chinese wall of Dingley and Taft tariffs the only people who can possibly invest in the islands, or who can profitably trade with them, are those of foreign countries who have not enacted prohibitive tariffs against Philippine products.

The suggestion that free trade with the Philippines would flood this country with Spanish merchandise imported by way of the islands, under the terms of the treaty of Paris, is too ridiculous to be considered as a serious argument in favor of this bill. Spain produces nothing that can bear the freight charges of trans-

This bill denies to the islands the opportunity of trading with us and denies to us the opportunity of obtaining new markets in the East. It denies to the Filipinos the possibility of becoming prosperous and perhaps content, and it insures the continued expenditure of millions on our Army. It taxes the people of this country for the benefit of the Filipinos when they might be made self-supporting. It measurements as a revenue measure while it self-supporting. It masquerades as a revenue measure, while it is in fact protection run mad. It is drawn in the interests of one petty industry, which, artificial in its origin and limited in its extent, seems to have unlimited influence with the Republican party. The same people who were able to postpone the granting of justice to Porto Rico have forced you gentlemen to deny justice to the Philippines. The beet-root sugar growers seem to control the Republican party.

The total consumption of sugar in the United States for the present year is estimated at 2,360,585 tons. Of this amount the New York Tribune on November 27 estimates that Louisiana, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the beet-root sugar growers in this country will furnish about a million tons, duty at the rate of about $36 a ton being paid on the difference. The revenue derived by the Government is therefore less than $50,000,000, but the price of sugar is increased on account of the duty, so that the people of the United States are paying $85,000,000 a year more for their sugar under protection than they would did it come in free; paying $85,000,000 a year to get less than $50,000,000 into the Treasury.

Thanks to the tariff, the total profit afforded to these four classes of sugar growers amounts to about $36,000,000 per annum. With free sugar from the Philippines this $36,000,000 per annum. With would probably disappear. The solicitude of the Republican party for the sugar-growing interests of this country is not due to any fordness for Democratic Louisians on for Hamiltonian any fondness for Democratic Louisiana or for Hawaii or Porto Rico, that have no electoral votes. The real cause of the enthu-siasm of gentlemen on the other side of the House for this bill is their tender interest in the welfare of the beet-root sugar industry.

Notwithstanding protection, that amounts, in one way or another, to 140 per cent, the total product of beet-root sugar in this country is only about 150,000 tons per annum. It is for this insignificant interest that you propose to enforce the Dingley law against the Philippines.

Under existing conditions the people of the United States are paying $85,000,000 a year for the support of the army in the Philippines and $85,000,000 a year of unnecessary taxation on sugar—$170,000,000 a year for the protection of the beet-root sugar industry, so that it may supply the market with 150,000 tons of sugar. In return we have a total commerce of less than $5,500,000 with the Philippines.

As long as you keep up the bars of protection and forbid the Filipinos to trade with us, just so long will they remain our enemies. If they can not sell to us they will not buy from us, and if they can not trade with us their sympathies will follow their interests. If you tear down the barbarous restrictions of a protective tariff between different parts of our territory, you will not only open new markets for American products, but by permitting the Filipinos to prosper you will have begun the work of pacifica-tion and of fitting them for self-government.

No man in this country has more profound respect and deeper admiration than have I for the men who wear the blue, our regu-Whether we are right, or whether we are wrong, I can only regard as enemies those who are in arms against our troops. the flag is under fire, partisanship vanishes and patriotism takes its place. But patriotism demands that we be magnanimous in war as we should be just in peace. Patriotism demands that we should make it as easy as possible for our enemies to lay down their

If the "white man's burden" is ruling the peoples of the Orient, and if you who have the power insist that we shall take it up, then in the name of the manhood of the people of the United States, and in the name of humanity, let us bear that burden in justice and in righteousness. time remaining.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I do not understand, Mr. Chairman, that anyone desires to speak. I reserve my time, but, of course, that can not be used after the other side. I understand that they have the right to close. No gentleman on this side desires to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. McCLELLAN. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Green].

[Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks leave to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, until within a very short period all the customs duties collected in the Philippine Islands were collected in accordance with the tariff prescribed by the Philippine Commission, and all the customs duties collected in rhippine Commission, and all the customs ditties confected in the United States upon goods coming from the Philippine Islands were collected in accordance with the provisions of the Dingley law. Under a recent decision of the Supreme Court, all articles now coming into the United States from the Philippine Islands come in free, and unless this bill be passed they will continue to come in free.

The purpose of the proposed legislation, therefore, is to restore the status quo as it existed prior to the decision of the Supreme Court. It seems to me that the reasons in favor of the passage of this legislation and the answer to the objections that have been made thereto will best be disclosed by a simple recital of the history of our administration in the Philippine Islands since their acquisition by the United States.

In the case of De Lima v. Bidwell the Supreme Court decided that Porto Rico is a part of the United States and that it is competent for Congress to impose tariff duties upon goods coming out of and upon goods going into that island, irrespective of the uniformity clause of the Constitution.

In the case of the Diamond Rings the Supreme Court has decided that the Philippine Islands, notwithstanding the existence of armed rebellion in those islands, stand in precisely the same attitude with respect to us as Porto Rico, and that it is competent for us to legislate for those islands, so far as revenues are concerned, irrespective of the uniformity clause of the Constitution.

Porto Rico, therefore, and the Philippines, while they come to us in one aspect of the case upon the same basis, come to us in another aspect upon different bases.

The right to legislate for Porto Rico, which was not in rebellion, which was in a state of peace, devolved upon Congress. The right to legislate for the Philippine Islands, in a state of insurrection, passed into the hands of the President as Commander in Chief of passed into the hands of the Freshder as commander in the first the Army and Navy of the United States. Now, one of the first duties of a military officer in the occupation of hostile territory is to provide revenue. He has the right to do so. Our Supreme Court said, in the case of Cross vs. Harrison, that—

The President, as Commander in Chief, had power to form a temporary civil government for California as a conquered country, and to impose duties on imports and tonnage for the support of the Government, and for aiding to sustain the burdens of the war, which were held valid until Congress saw fit to supersede them; and an action brought to recover back duties paid under such regulation was adjudged to be not maintainable.

In the exercise of this conceded power as Commander in Chief of the Army, the President of the United States not only proceeded to put down armed rebellion existing in those islands, but he proceeded also to do all the other acts necessary for the protection of society and the maintenance of individual and national rights. Among these was the necessity for the collection of revenue.

Exercising his military power, he, in the first instance, ordered the collection of the customs revenues which the people of the Philippines had been accustomed to pay for hundreds of years under the Spanish administration. His next step was to send a commission consisting of reputable gentlemen, nonpartisan in character, to make observations and to report as to what action was necessary on the part of the military commander for the welfare of the islands, and equally the welfare of the people of the United States.

The most important matter upon which that Commission (which The most important matter upon which that Commission (which was known as the Schurman Commission) reported was as to a form of government. And they reported in accordance with all our traditions as to the regulation of government in new territories heretofore acquired. They set aside, as not to be thought of, the idea of a protectorate. They equally set aside, as not to be thought of, the idea of a colonial government in any shape or form.

Gentlemen who stand here and talk about our colonial government in the Philippines simply show their ignorance of terms and of the legislative history of their country. This Commission said that the proper form of government, that which would most inure of the legislative history of their country. This Commission said that the proper form of government, that which would most inure to the benefit of the Filipinos and of the United States, was not a protectorate nor a colonial government, but a territorial government. With respect to it they go on to say this, to which I beg the attention of gentlemen:

This scheme of government possesses, besides its intrinsic merits, the historical interest attaching to origination with the author of the Declaration of Independence. Jefferson had outlined a first sketch as early as November, 1803, when he also defended both the appointment of judges for four years and the idea of an appointed legislature, "as a thing more familiar and pleasing to the French than the legislation of judges," which had been the practice in the Northwest Territory.

My friend from Colorado will observe that this distinguished founder of the Democratic party-I still read-seems to have felt no incongruity between the principles of the Declaration of Independence of the thirteen self-governing colonies and this scheme of government for the politically inexperienced inhabitants of Louisiana. Indeed, he complains with some bitterness in December, 1803, when the differences of opinion developed as to the manner of disposing of Louisiana.

I quote Mr. Jefferson:

Although it is acknowledged that our new fellow-citizens are as yet as incapable of self-government as children, yet some can not bring themselves to suspend the principles of the Declaration of Independence for a single moment.

Mr. Jefferson, however, could bring himself to suspend, and for as much time as was necessary, the principles of the Declaration of Independence in forming a scheme for the government of newly acquired territory. Let me prove this.

I call the attention of my friends on the other side to the act which was passed to enable the President of the United States to take possession of the Louisiana purchase. It was there pro-

That until the expiration of the present session of Congress, unless provision for the temporary government of the said territories be sooner made by Congress, all the military, civil, and judicial powers exercised by the officers of the existing government of the same shall be vested in such person and persons, and shall be exercised in such manner, as the President of the United States shall direct, for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of Louisiana in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

Mr. SHAFROTH. May I ask the gentleman a question? Mr. DALZELL. Certainly, if it does not consume too much

Mr. SHAFROTH. Only a question. Is not the distinction between the Louisiana case and the case of the Philippines simply this: That Mr. Jefferson and everybody else in the United States recognized when we acquired the Louisiana territory that we acquired it for the purpose of making States out of it; and will the quired it for the purpose of making States out of it; and will the gentleman say that we have acquired the Philippine Islands for the purpose of making States out of them?

Mr. DALZELL. In reply to my friend I will say that Mr. Jefferson did not advocate the acquisition of the Louisiana territory with the intention that it should subsequently become a State. He believed that we acquired it beyond the limits of the Constitution. He expressed himself as doubtful in regard to what the future of Louisiana should be whether it should be a part of the future of Louisiana should be—whether it should be a part of the Union, a part of a western confederacy, or no part of either. So that there is no distinction, so far as that point is concerned, between the case of the Philippine Islands and the case of Louisiana. But let me go a step further.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi rose.

Mr. DALZELL. I know what my friend from Mississippi would say. I understand his position exactly. But I will say to

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to ask a question. I wish to ask whether the utterance of opinion just referred to on the part of Mr. Jefferson was not an utterance of opinion prior to the acquisition of Louisiana.

Mr. DALZELL. It was not.

That was Mr. Jefferson's language while the question was being discussed as to the form of government to be adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. My recollection differs from that of the gentleman on that point.

Mr. DALZELL. Then the gentleman is mistaken; his recollection is at fault.

I want to say that under that resolution Mr. Jefferson turned over to a single man in the State of Louisiana, to be exercised by him, the authority that had theretofore been exercised by two distinct and separate departments of government under the rule of Spain—turned over to him the right to carry into execution in the Louisiana territory all the barbarous rules and laws which up to that time had been in operation under the rule of Spain.

But to go a step further. When Congress came to make a law for the government of the district of Louisiana it was provided

The executive power now vested in the governor of the Indiana Territory shall extend to and be exercised in the said district of Louisiana. The governor and judges of the Indiana Territory shall have power to establish in the said district of Louisiana inferior courts and prescribe their jurisdiction and duties and to make all laws which they may deem conducive to the good government of the inhabitants thereof.

The rights and liberties of the people of Louisiana were turned over to the tender mercies of a governor who did not reside within her boundaries, to judges who were strangers to her laws and her people, and who, with the governor, had the right to make and execute just such laws as they saw fit. Popular representation not only was not provided for, but was not thought of. If there be anything in the administration of the Philippine Islands up to this time that is as despotic as was that provision by that Congress for the government of the district of Louisiana, I have failed to find it. But that is not all. When Congress came to make a permanent government for the district of Louisiana, it provided that the legislative power, now for the first time con-ferred upon Louisiana, now for the first time taken from her alien governor and her alien judges-shall be vested in the governor and in three judges, or a majority of them, who shall have power to establish inferior courts in the said Territory, and prescribe their jurisdiction and duties, and to make all laws which they may deem conducive to the good government of the inhabitants thereof.

Mr. SHAFROTH. May I ask the gentleman another question? Mr. DALZELL. Certainly. Mr. SHAFROTH. Was it not stipulated in the treaty between the United States and France which ceded the territory called Louisiana to the United States that the inhabitants of the ceded territory should be incorporated into the Union?

Mr. DALZELL. I am afraid the gentleman is going to lead me off. Yes, it was so provided.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then—

Mr. DALZELL. And following that, the citizens of Louisiana presented to the Congress of the United States a most eloquent protest against the despotic government that had been set up over them, citing the provisions of the treaty and demanding that they be made citizens of the United States; to which the Congress of the United States, in a report signed by John Randolph, replied, telling the citizens of Louisiana that when the United States got ready to make them citizens, and when they were fit to be citizens of the United States, they would discuss that question.

Mr SHAFROTH Did they not get ready?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Did they not get ready?
Mr. DALZELL. Oh, I beg the gentleman to have some mercy upon my time. I have only three-quarters of an hour left.
Mr. SHAFROTH. All right. I just wanted to know whether they did not get ready and whether they were not admitted as citizens.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman and I do not agree. I understand his position, and I am endeavoring to make him understand

When the Congress of the United States came to authorize the President to take possession of the Floridas, ceded to us by Spain, they made this provision:

That until the end of the first session of the next Congress, unless provision for the temporary government of said Territories be sooner made by Congress, all the military, civil, and judicial powers exercised by the officers of the existing government of the same Territories shall be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct.

In other words, that the President of the United States should turn over to a single man the exercise of all the functions of government that theretofore had belonged to the various departments of government under the Spanish régime.

And when the Territory of Florida came to be organized finally, it was provided that the legislative power should be vested—in the governor and in thirteen of the most fit and discreet persons of the Territory, to be called the legislative council, who shall be appointed annually by the President of the United States, by and with the consent of the Senate.

And so forth.

Am I not right when I say that the government administered up to this time in the Philippine Islands under military law, and now, in addition, under the provisions of the Spooner amendment, is in accordance with the legislative traditions of our entire past, except that it is more generous?

But I go a step further for the benefit of the gentlemen who be-lieve that all just government derives its powers from the consent of the governed, which maxim, by the way, represents an un-truth. There never was in this country, there never will be, a government that acquires its just powers from the consent of the governed, if by that expression you mean, as you must, all the governed.

Why, our brethren of the South are to-day writing into their organic law provisions against government by the consent of the governed. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I take the liberty to invite the attention of gentlemen upon that side of the Chamber who are so zealous in defense of the rights of the little brown men in the Philippines to husband their resources for the protection of the rights and liberties of the black men in their own territory. [Applause on the Republican side.] There is no government by the consent of the governed in the District of Columbia. There is no government by consent of the governed in the district of Alaska, and there never has been. We have held Alaska since 1867, governed how? By a governor, a judge, a United States marshal, the clerk of the United States court, and commissioners, and Congress; and when we came to provide in the act that was passed in 1884 for a civil government for Alaska we took good care to put in this clause:

That there shall be no legislative assembly in said district, nor shall any elegate be sent to Congress therefrom.

Now, what has been the operation of this traditional policy? Has it been in accordance with the theory of a just government deriving its powers only from the consent of the governed? Let me call your attention to its operation in the Territory of Florida. hold in my hand the Annals of the Seventeenth Congress, first session, volume 2, and I find here an opinion delivered by Governor Andrew Jackson, acting as the judiciary of the Territory of Florida. As the judiciary of that Territory he decides a case.

I turn over a few leaves and I find a law made and passed by Maj. Gen. Andrew Jackson, governor of the Territory of Florida; and, coming down still further, I find that in 1822 this Congress found it necessary to pass laws repealing the laws that were made and ordained by Governor Andrew Jackson, sitting as the senate and because of representatives of the Territory of Florida. and house of representatives of the Territory of Florida. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Now, I ask you in all candor, was the government of the people of the Territory of Florida, in accordance with the Jeffersonian scheme, by Andrew Jackson as the executive, legislative, and judicial arms of the government all in one, a government that derived its just powers from the consent of the governed?

I recall the circumstance, and you will doubtless recall it, because it is historic, that Andrew Jackson arrested the ex-Spanish governor because he would not deliver to him certain papers and documents; that, thereupon, a judge of the Federal court in Floring ida issued a writ of habeas corpus to release the judge. General Jackson did not release the prisoner, but summoned the judge to appear before him for contempt [laughter]; and when the judge complained to the Democratic President, Mr. Monroe, he, in a document signed by John Quincy Adams, his Secretary of State, said that Governor Jackson was right and the judge was wrong. [Laughter.]

Now, I think I am justified in saying that in the Philippine Islands, up to this time, if we have not followed our traditional policies it has been only because we have been more generous to the Filipinos than we have heretofore been to other peoples who have come under our jurisdiction.

Now, what was the next step in our administration?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes; I will yield to a question.

Mr. McDERMOTT. This bill appears to be purely and absolutely a revenue bill. Can the gentleman state any instance where a tax was imposed on goods brought in or taken to any other territory in the invisition of the United States?

other territory in the jurisdiction of the United States?

Mr. DALZELL. Why, most assuredly. If the gentleman will study history he will find that the Louisiana purchase, for revenue purposes, was regarded as foreign territory for some time after its purchase, and that the same is true with respect to Florida after its acquisition. Any gentleman who is familiar with history will bear me out in the statement that I speak the truth.

Mr. MANN. "Go'way back." [Laughter on the Republican cide.]

Mr. DALZELL. Now, Mr. Chairman—Mr. McDERMOTT. If the gentleman will permit me, on account of the laughter I did not catch the last of his remark. Did I understand the gentleman to say by an act of Congress?

Mr. DALZELL. I have already answered the gentleman. I

Mr. DALZELL. I have already answered the gentleman. I must ask to be permitted to proceed.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Will the gentleman cite any act of Congress under which any such taxation was levied?

Mr. DALZELL. I decline to yield further. In furtherance of this same policy, Mr. Chairman, the President of the United States appointed a second Commission, consisting of five gentlemen, at the head of whom was Judge Taft. When I say that all these continuous ware applied to the continuous ware applie these gentlemen were equally reputable with the gentleman who headed the Commission, I can not give them higher praise. Judge Taft is a cultivated, scholarly gentleman, who left, for the sake of his country and for patriotic motives, a life position on the Federal bench to do his best toward the civilization of the Filipinos and their preparation for self-government.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, let me digress far enough to say that the criticism made upon the salaries paid to our representatives in the Philippine Islands would be amusing if it were not so grossly unthinking and unjust. These men are of the most conspicuous ability and of the highest repute. They have left home and its comforts for the discomforts and harassments of a tropical clime in the interests of their country. Their salaries are mere bagatelles compared with those of our Democratic friends in New York, with its chamberlain, at $25,000 a year; its comptroller, at $15,000 a year; its corporation counsel, at $15,000 a year; its district attorney, at $12,000 a year, with eight assistants, at $7,500 a year apiece.

Such criticism must fail of its object. The American people

But to return to my subject, it will be recollected that this Commission, in the first instance, acted under the military power of the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy; but the military power is capable by analysis of being divided into three parts—the executive, the legislative, and the judicial. And following out this division, this Commission constituted itself a governor and a cabinet, similar to our President and Cabinet; constituted itself a legislative assembly; and in order to carry out all the duties attaching to every department of government, created a judiciary.

First, as to the judiciary, the Philippines have a supreme court, consisting of a chief justice and six associates. The chief justice of that court is the most distinguished of Filipino lawyers. There are also Filipino lawyers as associate justices, together with Americans upon the bench. They have courts of first instance, corresponding, I take it, with our courts of common pleas. They have justices of the peace throughout the islands, and each and every one of these offices is filled by a Filipino who is familiar with the language, the habits and customs, the thoughts and purposes of his people. Our commissioners, acting as an executive body, have constituted a most admirable system.

They have a committee on agriculture and fisheries, a committee on appropriations, a committee on banking and currency, on the city of Manila, on commerce, on franchises and corporations, on health, on the judiciary, on municipal and provisional governments, on the non-Christian tribes, on police and prisons, on printing, on public instruction, on public lands, mining and forestry, on taxation and revenue—as perfect and enlightened a system of government as exists anywhere, either in a monarchy or a republic, upon the face of this earth.

They have gone to work and, in a legislative capacity, have passed and put upon the statute books 263 acts, and every one in the interest of the Philippines and in the interest of the United States, for the interests are common. They have initiated a civil service, established hospitals, made harbor improvements, established a constabulary, which in the course of a short time will take the place of the army, filled up with Filipinos on whom trust can be reposed. They have established coast guards and light-houses and built highways. And, above all things, they have established a system of education.

They recognize the fact that in education is to be found the safe solution of all questions, whatever they may be, and the foundation of good government, whatever its form. There is a foundation of good government, whatever its form. There is a normal school in Manila. They have an agricultural school, a school of telegraphy, and many others. Primary schools are all over the islands. There are 150,000 school children more than anxover the islands. There are 150,000 school children more than anxious to acquire the English language and to learn all those things which would fit them to be good citizens. There are only 75,000 of them that can be enrolled. It is needed that these should be provided for. There are 10,000 native teachers, 4,000 to 5,000 Filipinos, attending night schools in their eagerness to learn the English language. Now, all these things are the marks of our imperial march for the benefit of the Filipinos.

Gentlemen say, Why not resolve to give them self-government? We are doing more than passing resolves; we are preparing them for and fitting them to have self-government. We are not resolving; we are acting. [Applause on the Republican side.]

In the last report made by the Philippine Commission they say:

In the last report made by the Philippine Commission they say:

The theory upon which the Commission is proceeding is that the only possible method of instructing the Filipino people in methods of free institutions and self-government is to make a government partly of Americans and partly of Filipinos, giving the Americans the ultimate control for some time to come. In our last report we pointed out that the great body of the people were ignorant, superstitious, and at present incapable of understanding any government but that of absolutism.

The intelligence and education of the people may be largely measured by knowledge of the Spanish language. Less than 10 per cent of the people speak Spanish. With Spanish spoken in all official avenues, nothing could be more significant of the lack of real intelligence among the people than this statement. The common people are not a warlike people, but are submissive and easily—indeed much too easily—controlled by the educated among them, and the power of an educated Filipino politically ambitious, willing to plot and use all the arts of a demagogue in rousing the people, is quite dangerous.

The educated people themselves, though full of phrases concerning liberty, have but a faint conception of what real civil liberty is and the mutual self-restraint which is involved in its maintenance. They find it hard to understand the division of powers in a government and the limitations that are operative upon all officers, no matter how high. In the municipalities, in the Spanish days, what the friar did not control the presidente did, and the people knew and expected no limit to his exercise of authority. This is the difficulty we now encounter in the organization of the municipalities, in the Spanish days, what the friar did not control the presidente did, and the people knew and expected no limit to his exercise of authority. This is the difficulty we now encounter in the organization of the municipality. The presidente fails to observe the limitations upon his power, and the speak, read, and write English or Spanish, or that he shall have been formerly a municipal officer, or that he should pay a tax equal to $15 a year or own property of the value of $250.

Now, our Commission has gone further, assuring to the Filipinos a voice in their own government; they have gone into all that area of territory which has been conquered and have established provinces which correspond to our counties; have established municipalities which correspond to our cities, and in the government of these the Filipinos themselves take part.

Now, all this, of course, requires money. How shall that money be raised? Let me in this connection call your attention to what the first Commission, the Schurman Commission, said with respect to the raising of revenue.

The Commission has carefully considered the feasibility of assimilating the tariff of the Philippines to that of the United States. The differences, however, appear to be fundamental and irreconcilable; the tariffs are as far apart as the corresponding economic, industrial, and social conditions of the two countries. The following table shows the chief articles imported into the Philippines (comprising, indeed, two-thirds per cent of the total imports) along with the duties levied on them in the Philippines, and also in the United States (the equivalent of Philippine weights and measures being also given for purposes of comparison).

I will not go through the list. On rice the Philippine duty is 17 cents a hundredweight; United States duty is $2 a hundredweight. Still wines, the Philippine duty is 28 cents a gallon, while the United States duty is 40 cents a gallon. Spirits, the Philippine duty is 21 cents a gallon, while the United States duty is $2.25; and so on through the list.

The report continues:

The very first article on the list seems to show the divergency in the customs duties of the two countries and also the impracticability of their assimilation; for rice being in the Philippines the food of the people, there would be riots if importations were taxed $2 per hundredweight instead of 17 cents. Other examples reenforce with equal strength the conclusion that the tariffs can not be assimilated.

The impossibility of the assimilation of a Philippine with an American tariff is the first reason assigned by the Commission for American tariii is the first reason assigned by the Commission for the imposition of the duties that were put into their customs tariff. But again, in levying taxes, regard must always be had to the character, the history, the conditions, and the habits and customs of the people taxed. Taxes must be levied in accordance with the of the people taxed. Taxes must be levied in accordance with the kind of taxes the people have been accustomed to pay. For three or four hundred years these people have been paying not only cus-toms duties upon those things that came into the islands, but ex-

They have no land tax; they are dependent in the main upon the custom-house, upon the taxable goods that go in and the taxable goods that go out, for the money necessary to run their government. And while at first sight it may seem to us not to be the proper thing to impose export taxes, I undertake to say that upon consideration no gentleman will find any objection to these export taxes. There certainly is no constitutional objection, because, in the first place, the constitutional inhibition against export taxes is only upon those levied by a State, and it is to be borne in mind that the Constitution permits export duties to be levied by any State with the consent of Congress when the money goes into the Federal Treasury.

Under these circumstances, when this Commission's customs tariff came to the Committee on Ways and Means it came with every argument in its favor that could be adduced. In addition it was shown to us that this tariff law was prepared precisely as we prepare a tariff law here. The Commission sat as a commit-we prepare a tariif law here. The Commission sat as a commit-tee; it sat throughout the islands and had the representatives of all the various industries appear before them.

After that it was sent to this country, submitted to the Secre-tary of War, by him caused to be published in all the trade journals of this country; criticism was asked for and invited, and as the result of all that this tariff for the Philippine Islands, as embodied in the bill now before the House, was adopted by the committee. I am satisfied from what I have seen as the result of my examination of this matter that if the committee had spent months in the preparation of such a bill they could not have made a better or possibly as good a one.

Made a better or possibly as good a one.

Now, that is the tariff proposition so far as the Philippine Islands are concerned. So far as the United States are concerned, our proposition is that we shall levy the rates of the Dingley bill. With them we are satisfied. And I want to say to my friends on the other side of the House, notwithstanding their allegations of discontent throughout the country, such discontent does not exist save among free traders.

There is not, in my judgment, any chance of any modification of the Dingley bill, either by unreasonable reciprocity treaties that would injure American industries; or by any other method that would harm American capital or labor so long as the Republican party is in power and holds the reins of Government. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

The country has not forgotten the Slough of Despond into which the Wilson bill led us, nor the weary, dismal years of the Cleveland Administration.

The country is not unmindful of the tremendous significance of the figures that I now submit as a comparison between the years 1896 and 1901.

Exports Exports of domestic merchandise Exports of manufactures Coal mined (tons) Pig iron produced (tons) Pig iron produced Crude steel manufactured (tons)	$228,571,178 142,121,167 8,623,127	$1,487,764,991 $1,460,462,806 $412,155,066 240,965,917 13,789,242 $259,944,000 10,082,905

In 1883 the nation was threatened by the Wilson tariff act. The balance of trade was then against the United States. How it was changed under the Dingley tariff the following figures show:

1893, balance against us 1901, balance in our favor

The balance of trade for periods of three years under the two tariffs was-1893, 1894, 1895 (Wilson), balance in our favor $202,675,608 1898, 1899, 1900 (Dingley), balance in our favor 1,600,072,374

Why, sir, the gentlemen who abuse the Dingley bill forget the depths out of which we came—forget the condition of things that we were suffering under the Wilson bill—forget the changed conditions at home and abroad and in every way that have been brought about by the beneficent operations of the Dingley bill. There is no point of view from which this bill can be looked at in which it does not present itself not only as the protector of American industries, but as the efficient cause of American prosperity. It stands for the American home and for everything that is dear to the American heart. [Applause from the Republican side.]

What is your proposition, gentlemen on the other side of this House? It seems that you have no proposition to make. I have no admiration for the kind of statesmanship that is crying for spilled milk. I have no patience with gentlemen who talk about the acquisition of the Philippines as a blunder and a "mistake." I will not stop to enter into any argument with them on that subject. It is irrelevant to this discussion. You know as well as I that "it is a condition and not a theory that confronts us." The Philippines are ours; let us be men; we were sent here to act; let Philippines are ours; let us be men; we were sent here to act, let us by some act or acts of constructive statesmanship, not by whining about what is past, do something both for the Philippines and ourselves. [Applause.]

If you gentlemen on the other side are not for this bill, you are for free trade—free trade with the Philippine Islands; free trade against the interest of the tobacco raiser of the county of Lancaster, in my own State of Pennsylvania, and against every other American tobacco raiser and in favor of the tobacco raiser by cheap labor in the Philippine Islands; free trade against the interests of the rice grower of the United States and the sugar grower and in favor of the rice grower and the sugar grower in the Philippine Islands; free trade against the interests of that great army of cigar makers in this country, so as to bring in duty free the cheap-made cigars of the cheap labor of the Philippine Islands.

If that be your position, the people will reckon with you at the polls as they have reckoned with you in the past. There is not a gentleman on the other side of the House who, if that proposition were before us, would dare to so vote. You sit silent as to any legislation, as to any suggestion of legislation, and utter your protests only in a formal and hypocritical way that can accomplish sething.

Now, I have somewhat digressed, and I want to return and read you briefly what the Commission say with respect to this Philippine tariff:

All the revenues that have accrued to the insular treasury from the collection of customs duties since the American occupation have been based upon the tariff laws which were in force under the Spanish régime, and revised, with minor modifications, by order of Major-General Otis. The duties thus imposed have been, in some respects, burdensome, and, while producing a large revenue, have yet been unjust in their operation upon many classes in the community. The duties upon necessaries of life were generally high, while those upon luxuries were usually low. The tariff in its practical operation was not adapted to encourage the importation of goods produced or manufactured in the United States.

The theory of the tariff as constructed by the Commission was to give reasonable encouragement to the productions and manufactures of the Philippine Islands, gravily to reduce the cost of importing the necessaries of life, particularly those produced or manufactured in the United States, to increase the duties upon luxuries, to give substantial or entire freedom from the imposition of all duties upon certain articles imperatively needed in the islands, and to make the duties specific instead of ad valorem to the fullest extent that was practicable.

It would appear, then, if I am right, that so far as the Philippine tariff proposed in this bill is concerned, it is written in the interest both of the Philippines and of the citizens of the United States; and so far as the tariff law at the other end is concerned, it is the Dingley law, about which nothing further need be said.

I know of no better vindication of the wisdom of this bill than was made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Swanson], who opened the debate upon that side of the House, when he complained that this bill gave an advantage to American producers in the Philippine markets and protected the American labor in our own markets against the cheap labor of the Philippines. And I own markets against the cheap labor of the Philippines. And I would not have you forget that every dollar realized under the provisions of this bill, whether in the Philippines or in the United States, is dedicated to the interest of Philippine advancement.

Gentlemen on the other side of the House have argued that we get a very small return by way of trade from the Philippine Islands; and they have also argued that we shall never realize anything by way of commercial gain in the future from those islands. Sir, I decline to regard the question of values as any factor in the decision of this question factor in the decision of this question.

So far as I am concerned, I care very little for what we may get by way of trade from the Philippine Islands at this time or for what of wealth we may reasonably expect to gain at some future day. This issue is upon a higher plane than that of dollars and cents. How shall the American people respond to the tremendous task and the grave responsibilities that in the provience of God have been pleased around them? That is the greeting that is the have been placed upon them? That is the question; that is the large, the momentous, and vital question for us to answer.

My imagination fails to compass the spectacle of the American people abandoning their duty and hauling down their flag. [Applause.] I am unable to conjure up the spectacle of our people recklessly leaving, hopeless and adrift, these Filipinos, untaught in the practice of self-government, to become the prey of some in the practice of self-government, to become the prey of some buccaneer nation that may seize them, or the disputed prize in a war of selfishness. And I conceive it to be absolutely impossible that this great Republic shall ever put up these islands at auction, to be sold at a price that would be the measure of its cowardice, its dishonor, and its abandonment of duty. [Applause.]

Rather, Mr. Chairman, I indulge, I will not say the hope, but the belief, that moving along our traditional historic lines, in conformity with our established character, we shall go forward to the Christianization and the circlivation of these islands of the

to the Christianization and the civilization of these islands of the sea, so that in time to come the principles of civil and religious liberty shall find flower and fruitage in the Orient as the result of the seeds planted and nourished by us. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Hepburn reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back with the recommendation that it pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was decided in the affirmative; and the bill was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means with the instructions which I send to the desk

The Clerk read as follows:

To report a bill reducing the tariff laws and internal-revenue laws now in force in other portions of the United States to a revenue basis and apply the same to all portions of the United States, including the Philippine Islands, to be in effect in said islands until order has been restored there and the Filipinos permitted, with the aid of the United States, to establish a stable and independent government.

Mr. PAYNE. I move the previous question on the motion to recommit with instructions.

The previous question was ordered.

The question having been put on the motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee

The SPEAKER said: The noes appear to have it.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I call for a division.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

A RESOLUTION.

A RESOLUTION.

Whereas the spirit of anarchy has inspired assassination, and William McKinley, President of the United States, has been laid low as its victim; and Whereas in his cruel murder the nation has been plunged into the most profound grief and mourning; and

Whereas this municipality shares in common with all other portions of the Union the consequence of this calamity, and in the general esteem for the noble character, great ability, and blameless life of our departed Chief Executive: Therefore, be it

Resolved, by the city council of Salt Lake City. That we regard with horror the bloody deed which has deprived the Republic of its head; that we join in the general sorrow at his decease; that we appreciate the grand, heroic, and Christian example his whole career has furnished to mankind; that we demand swift but legal justice to his assassin; that we extend our deep and heartfelt sympathy to his loved and loving wife in her sad bereavement; that we call for measures which shall result in the extirpation of anarchism and of all organizations that aim at the lives of public officials and seek to destroy government and social order.

Resolved also, That copies of this preamble and resolution be sent to the widow of our bereaved and lamented President, and to the Congress of the United States, and be published in the daily newspapers of this city.

A joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States relative to the education of Indian children in the State of South Dakota.

Whereas the Indian appropriation bill before the Congress of the United States provides for the expenditure of not to exceed $167 per capita for support and education of each Indian pupil enrolled in the Indian industrial schools of the United States; and

Whereas this amount being the same in all sections of the United States without regard to climatic conditions, it is plainly evident that the schools of this section are discriminated against by reason of being obliged to expend for fuel and clothing not less than $25 per capita in excess of the amount expended at other schools of the same class for the same purpose in the warmer climates; and for the and clothing not less than $25 per capita in excess of the amount expended at other schools of the same class for the same purpose in the warmer climates; and

Whereas this excessive expenditure for fuel and clothing in the South Dakota schools leaves an insufficient balance of the $167 to properly equip and officer the same, thus placing them on an unequal footing for good and efficient work with schools of the Southern climate: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the legislature of the State of South Dakota does hereby petition and memorialize the Congress of the United States to increase the allowance for Indian education in the Indian industrial schools of South Dakota from $167 to $180 per capita.

BOND OF MARSHAL FOR ALASKA.

I introduce a bill, and though it has not yet gone Mr. HOAR. to any committee, I desire to ask that it be put on its passage.

The bill (S. 2044) to increase the amount of the official bond to be furnished by the United States marshal for the district of Alaska in certain cases was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 459 of the act of March 3, 1899, be amended so as to read: "That whenever the business of the courts in any division of the district of Alaska shall make it necessary, in the opinion of the Attorney-General, for the marshal for said division to furnish greater security than the official bond now required by law, a bond in a sum not to exceed $5,500 shall be given when required by the Attorney-General, who shall fix the amount thereof."

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HALE. Before putting that question, let the Senator from Massachusetts explain why it is that the passage of the bill is urged now.

Mr. HOAR. If any Senator objects, I will withdraw the bill.

I do not object.

Mr. HALE. Mr. HOAR. Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, this bill has not been in the hands of any committee, but it comes from the Attorney-General's Office, where it was drafted.

The Attorney-General now has power to fix the official bonds of marshals in a sum not to exceed $40,000, but in Alaska, owing to the difficulty of communication, it is necessary to have in the hands of the marshal, by the payment of witnesses' and jury fees and other sums, a larger amount than $40,000. So the present $40,000 limit does not secure the United States, and this bill sim-$40,000 limit does not secure the United States, and this bill simply provides that in the case of Alaska the Attorney-General shall have discretion to require a bond up to $75,000, if he sees fit. It ought to be done at once. It would not be possible to get the committee together to report it to-day, and I thought under the circumstances, as it is a clear case, I would ask for its present consideration. I will withdraw the bill if a single Senator objects.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOUTHERN APPALACHIAN FOREST RESERVE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of Agriculture, prepared in collaboration with the Department of the Interior, upon the forests, rivers, and mountains of the Southern Appalachian region, and upon its agricultural situation as affected by them. The report of the Secretary presents the final results of an investigation authorized by the last Congress. Its conclusions point unmistakably, in the judgment of the Secretary, and in my own, to the creation of a national forest reserve in certain parts of the Southern States. The facts ascertained and here presented deserve the careful consideration of the Congress. They have already received the full attention of the scientist and the lumberman. They set forth an economic need of prime importance to the welfare of the South, and hence to that of the nation as a whole, and they point to the necessity of protecting through wise use a mountain region whose influence flows far beyond its borders with the waters of the rivers to which it gives rise.

Among the elevations of the eastern half of the United States the Southern Appalachians are of paramount interest for geographic, hydrographic, and forest reasons, and, as a consequence, for economic reasons as well. These great mountains are old in the history of the continent which has grown up about them. The hard-wood forests were born on their slopes and have spread thence over the eastern half of the continent. More than once in the remote goologic past they have disappeared before sea on the east, south, and west, and before the ice on the north. But here in this Southern Appalachian region they have lived on to the present day.

Under the varying conditions of soil, elevation, and climate, many of the Appalachian tree species have developed. Hence it is that in this region occur that marvelous variety and richness of plant growth which have led our ablest business men and scientists to ask for its preservation by the Government for the ad

The conclusions of the Secretary of Agriculture are summarized as follows in his report:

1. The Southern Appalachian region embraces the highest peaks and largest mountain masses east of the Rockies. It is the great physiographic feature of the eastern half of the continent, and no such lofty mountains are covered with hard-wood forests in all North America.

2. Upon these mountains descends the heaviest rainfall of the United States, except that of the North Pacific coast. It is often of extreme violence, as much as 8 inches having fallen in eleven hours, 31 inches in one month, and 105 inches in a year.

3. The soil, once denuded of its forests and swept by torrential rains, rapidly loses, first, its humus, then its rich upper strata, and finally is washed in enormous volume into the streams, to bury such of the fertile lowlands as are not croded by the floods, obstruct the rivers, and fill up the harbors on the coast. More good soil is now washed from these cleared mountain-side fields during a single heavy rain than during centuries under forest cover.

4. The rivers which originate in the Southern Appalachians flow into or along the edges of every State from Ohio to the Gulf and from the Atlantic to the Mississippi. Along their courses are agricultural, water-power, and navigation interests, whose preservation is absolutely essential to the well-being of the nation.

5. The regulation of the flow of these rivers can be accomplished only by the conservation of the forests.

6. These are the heaviest and most beautiful hard-wood forests of the con-tinent. In them species from East and West, from North and South, mingle in a growth of unparalleled richness and variety. They contain many spe-cies of the first commercial value and furnish important supplies which can not be obtained from any other region.

7. For economic reasons the preservation of these forests is imperative. Their existence in good condition is essential to the prosperity of the lew-lands through which their waters run. Maintained in productive condition they will supply indispensable materials which must fail without them. Their management under practical and conservative forestry will sustain and increase the resources of this region and of the nation at large, will serve as an invaluable object lesson in the advantages and practicability of forest preservation by use, and will soon be self-supporting from the sale of timber.

8. The agricultural resources of the Southern Appalachian region must be protected and preserved. To that end the preservation of the forests is an indispensable condition which will lead not to the reduction but to the increase of the yield of agricultural products.

9. The floods in these mountain-born streams, if this forest destruction continues, will increase in frequency and violence and in the extent of their damages, both within this region and across the bordering States. The extent of these damages, like those from the washing of the mountain fields and roads, can not be estimated with perfect accuracy, but during the present year alone the total has approximated $10,000,000 -a sum sufficient to purchase the entire area recommended for the proposed reserve. But this loss can not be estimated in money value alone. Its continuance means the early destruction of conditions most valuable to the nation, and which neither skill nor wealth can restore.

10. The preservation of the forests, of the streams, and of the agricultural interests here described can be successfully accomplished only by the purchase and creation of a national forest reserve. The States of the Southern Appalachian region own little or no land, and their revenues are inadequate to carry out this plan. Federal action is obviously necessary, is fully justified by reasons of public necessity, and may be expected to have most fortunate results.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 73) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River near Fort Gibson, Ind. T.; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 73. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River near Fort Gibson, Ind. T.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of pended each month.

Representatives that the President had approved and signed joint resolution of the following title:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 76) to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1901, on the 18th of said month.

REFURNISHING THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a report from the commission to direct and supervise the expenditure of the appropriation for refurnishing the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire the report read or printed?

Mr. CANNON. I will ask to have it printed; but I desire to submit the accompanying resolution and dispose of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois presents a report from the commission to refurnish the Hall and other portions of the House, and also submits a resolution, which will be read for consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That so much of the report of the commission to direct and supervise the refurnishing of the House as relates to the rules of the House be referred to the Committee on Rules, and so much of the said report as relates to the care, repair, and purchase of furniture be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, with authority to report the same in one of the general appropriation bills.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The report will be printed, and referred in accordance with the terms of the resolution.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

TRANSCRIPTS OF RECORDS AND PLATS FOR THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to pass the following bill:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7471) to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for transcripts of records and plats in the General Land Office.

of records and plats in the General Land Office.

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply a deficiency in the appropriation made for the fiscal year 1902, for furnishing transcripts of records and plats, General Land Office, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That copyists employed under this appropriation shall be selected by the Secretary of the Interior at a compensation of $2 per day while actually employed, at such times and for such periods as exigencies of the work may demand.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know something about this bill. Has it been considered by any committee?
Mr. CANNON. It has not.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think it ought to go to a committee?

Mr. CANNON. Ordinarily, yes. If the gentleman will allow me just a minute, I think I can satisfy him that it ought to pass. There has been for two or three years an appropriation of $10,000 for the work referred to in this deficiency item. Last year there was a deficiency of almost $10,000. It will be noticed that the employment is not to exceed $2 a day. This is necessary work and proper to be done, and not under the civil service, as the gentleman will notice. I have a letter here from the Secretary of the Interior, in which he asks for this deficiency appropriation, covering the statement that the appropriation for $10,000 has been exhausted; and I know, otherwise, that there is a considerable roll, exhausted; and I know, otherwise, that there is a considerable roll, probably twenty-nine or thirty people, in the main women, who are engaged in this work.

As I stated, the work is proper to be done, and they have expended—did last year and have this—in six months what should have been apportioned throughout the whole year; and now, with have been apportioned throughout the whole year; and now, with the work to be done, with a roll of twenty-nine or thirty people, and, as I understand, substantially helpless people—I do not know any of them—from the standpoint of public service, as well as from the standpoint of Christmas time, when the matter was brought to my attention this morning, as there was no opportunity to call the committee together, it seemed to me, with the recommendation of the Secretary and in addition the insistence of the officials of the General Land Office that it was my data to of the officials of the General Land Office, that it was my duty to state the facts to the House and ask for the passage of the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest that within the last two weeks the land office at Mangum, Okla., has been destroyed by fire, and these records ought to be made out as soon as possible? That makes an additional reason why this bill should pass.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I have already stated that in the public service it ought to be done; but so far as I am concerned, if I have any influence in the preparation of the bill that carries this have any it will be to report it with an appropriation of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Is this a Senate bill?

Mr. CANNON. No. Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does the gentleman hope to-day to get it through the Senate?

Mr. CANNON. I suppose probably if it goes over there at once it may pass the Senate. At any rate it seemed to be my duty under these circumstances to ask unaminous consent for its

Mr. FLEMING. Do I understand the gentleman to say that these employees are not under the civil service?

Mr. CANNON. No.

Mr. FLEMING. Can the gentleman explain to the House why they are not?

Mr. CANNON. It was supposed to be a temporary service when first authorized. There was a provision that the pay should not exceed $2 a day, and it has gone that way ever since. I will say to my friend—while I have no employee there, and am not acquainted with any employee on this roll, and never have been, and a proving the payon fix it at $2 a day as and never asked an appointment-when you fix it at $2 a day, as I understand, it goes substantially to lady copyists—women copyists; and it is represented to me some of them are widows with children and in need of the compensation, and as I believe they are performing the service, I am quite content with the civil-service law, which is part and parcel of the policy of the Departments, but goetlemon and parted the civil-service law, which were the service law and parted the civil-service law. ments; but gentlemen understand the situation about a great capital like this by the mere reference to it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield to me for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; with pleasure.
Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman to say that, in his judgment, if this appropriation had been properly expended only one-twelfth would have been expended per month and the appropriation would not now be exhausted.

Mr. CANNON. In my judgment, this appropriation ought to have been apportioned one-twelfth for each month and there ought to be no deficiency. This year, as last year, it has been expended in the first six months, but, in my judgment, if this appropriation is to be continued for the coming fiscal year, which I believe it ought to be, I trust the House will see to it that the direction is made by law to apportion one-twelfth of it to each month.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will remember that when the appropriation bill was before the House I raised a point of order upon the provision authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to employ these copyists and the provision was stricken out, but it was afterwards inserted in the bill, in conference or otherwise.

Mr. CANNON. Inserted by Senate amendment.
Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman from Illinois believe that if the copyists were under the civil-service law no more would be employed than were required, instead of padding the service in order to give employment to friends of influential people?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I will say to the gentleman that I do not believe there is much employment of friends of influential people. believe there is much employment of friends of influential people.

I am rather inclined to believe that this is one of the small appropriations that are expended by virtue of personal appeal from the standpoint of the necessity of the applicant, as well as the ability of the applicant to do the work.

Mr. MANN. Well, so far as the public service is concerned, I should object to the joint resolution; but on the plea of mercy for the widows, made by the gentleman from Illinois, I will make no objection. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Well, I have given the gentleman all I know about it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair will state that this is a bill and not a joint resolution, and the question is on the engrossing and third reading of the bill. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

RESERVATION OF FORESTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of Agriculture, prepared in collaboration with the Department of the Interior, upon the forests, rivers, and mountains of the Southern Appalachian region and upon its agricultural situation as affected by them. The report of the Secretary presents the final results of an investigation authorized by the last Congress. Its conclusions point unmistakably, in the judgment of the Secretary and in my own, to the creation of a national forest reserve in certain of the Southern States. The facts ascertained and here presented deserve the careful consideration of the Congress. They have already received the full attention of the scientist and the lumberman. They set forth an economic need of prime importance to the welfare of the South, and hence to that of the nation as a whole, and they point to the necessity of protecting through wise use a mountain region whose influence flows far beyond its borders with the waters of the rivers to which

These great mountains are old in the history of the continent which has grown up about them. The hard-wood forests were born on their slopes, and have spread thence over the eastern half of the continent. More than once in the remote geologic past they have disappeared before the sea on the east, south, and west, and before the ice on the north. But here in this Southern Apparameters of the varying conditions of soil, elevation, and climate many of the Appalachian tree species have developed. Hence it is that in this region occur that marvelous variety and richness of plant growth which have led our ablest business men and scientists to ask for its preservation by the Government for the advancement of science, and for the instruction and pleasure of the people of our own and of future generations. And it is the concentration which has led forest experts and lumbermen alike to assert that of all the continent this region is best suited to the purpose and plans of a national forest reserve in the hard-wood region.

"1. The southers assess east of the Rockies. It is the great physiographic freeture of the assert half of the continent, and no such lorry mountains are covered with hard-wood forests in all North America.

ALBERT SCOTT.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

House resolution 69.

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized to place the name of Albert Scott on the rolls of the House as a laborer, to be paid at the rate of $50 per month from the contingent fund during the Fifty-seventh Congress, subject to the jurisdiction of the Doorkeeper of the

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This, Mr. Speaker, is the resolution that I offered the other day. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Hemenway] made some question about it, but he has examined it and concedes that we were entitled to him, and has said to the Chair and me that he has no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privileges

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. For five months I was absent on a visit to the Philippine Islands. During that time some parties saw fit to circulate in my district a report that I had asked to have the consideration of the rural free-delivery service in my district post-poned until my return, and considerable comment arose over the

I desire to present to the House, in order to disabuse the minds of those who may have been misled, to uncover those who may have been hypocritical, and to confute those who openly lied, some evidence of the facts in the case. I ask that the Clerk read the letter which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the letter as follows:

BUTLER, Mo., April 6, 1901.

The Clerk read the letter as follows:

Butler, Mo., April 6, 1901.

Dear Sir: It has been my understanding that in appointing carriers for rural free-delivery routes effort would be made to give to the Democrats and the Republicans, approximately, equal representation. Upon this theory, when the first carriers for service out of Clinton, Henry County, Mo., were selected, one of the two was a Republican, the other a Democrat, both satisfactory to all concerned. But later, when a number of other carriers were to be engaged for service out of Clinton, the Republican postmaster at that place took it upon himself, as I am informed, to recommend seven Republicans and not a single person of any other party. This same postmaster had part in the selection of the one Republican and the one Democrat in the first instance, consulting then with Democrats and agreeing with them upon the two carriers thus chosen. The county has a large Democratic majority, and Democrats and Republicans cooperated in petitioning for the establishment of the nine routes asked for, with Clinton as the supply point.

But after the selection, by mutual agreement, of the first two carriers named, no recommendations are desired by this postmaster, outside his own party. Now, what I would like to know definitely is whether it still is the intention of your Department to give the Democrats a fair share of these carriers, or whether it is the plan to permit the postmasters to make the selections, to the exclusion of the Congressmen, when a Democrat. If I am to have any influence in determining who shall be the carriers upon these routes. I wish to make some suggestions for a fairer division than eight to one-eight Republicans to one Democrat. If, upon the other hand, I am not to be permitted to have anything to do with the selections, two disk to know it.

I trust that I may have a plain answer to this letter at your earliest convenience, so that I shall know just what the attitude of the Department is toward me, in reference to the matter.

Very respe

Hon. FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I submit that this is not a question of personal privilege, and I am unwilling that it should go on under that guise. I have no objection to its coming in under un mimous consent, but I can not see how it is a question of perso all privilege

Mr. DE ARMOND. I do not see exactly how the gentleman is going to understand what this question of privilege is until this matter is disclosed. I stated that I rose to a question of privilege; that there had been scattered through the district that I have the honor to represent, during my absence, reports to the effect that I had caused action upon the rural free-delivery service to be held that caused action upon the rural free-derivery service to be find up until my return. I say that that representation was false. I say that some honest people were misled by it. I say that some hypocritical people gave countenance to it. I say that some liars circulated it. Now, I propose to show by these letters, some from myself and some from the Department, that a statement of that him disput true, that it does may injusting that it misleads the kind is not true; that it does me injustice; that it misleads the people of my district; that people have been misled in this matter without my fault. The SPEAKER.

The SPEAKER. The letter read at the desk in no sense presents a question of personal privilege. The gentleman has stated that falsehoods have been circulated in regard to him; but there is nothing before the House to that effect—nothing tangible for the House to consider. If the gentleman has anything sustaining the statement that he has been attacked in his representative ca-

the statement that he has been attacked in his representative capacity, it may very properly be presented to the House.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Do I understand the Speaker to intimate that when I state, as a member on this floor, a fact within my knowledge, I need to have some sort of a voucher?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will endeavor to be understood. The gentleman has sent up to be read as involving a question of personal privilege a certain letter which he wrote to the Department which in itself bears not at all upon any question of privilege. The Chair was simply calling the gentleman's attention to that fact, and suggested further that if the gentleman had anything tangible to lay before the House showing an attack upon him in his representative capacity, it would be a most proper thing to have it presented.

Mr. DE ARMOND. If the Chair will understand me, I have stated the question of personal privilege. I will state it again. I state that I was absent for something like five months on a visit to the Philippines; that during that time reports were put abroad in my district that action in regard to rural free-delivery service had been postponed at my request until my return. I say that that is a false charge. I say that some persons hypocritically gave color to it. I say that other people, lying and knowing that they lied, circulated it; and I say that other people were misled by it. I propose to show that what I say in regard to the fact of the matter is true. I propose to show this by a series of letters, and the letter read is one of them. I do not claim that that letter in itself presents the question of privilege. I use it as a part of my remarks, rising to this question of privilege which I have stated. The question of privilege is that reports have been circulated con-The question of privilege is that reports have been circulated con-cerning my action as a member of this House which are not true and are damaging. I propose to show, not so much by what I am uttering now—not at all by that, in fact, but by documentary evidence—that that statement in regard to a matter of fact is untrue. The SPEAKER. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Missouri if he has anything further to lay before the House?

Mr DE ARMOND. Why Mr Speaker that letter alone would

Mr. DE ARMOND. Why, Mr. Speaker, that letter alone would

The SPEAKER. Anything that attacks the gentleman in his representative capacity may, in the opinion of the Chair, be submitted to the House.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I do not exactly understand the Chair.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I do not exactly understand the Chair. Do I understand the Chair—
The SPEAKER. The Chair will endeavor to be understood. If a Representative has a controversy with one of the Departments about patronage, the gentleman from Missouri will readily see that it does not constitute a question of personal privilege, which a member of the House may at any time make the pretext for taking the floor and occupying the time of the House. If the gentleman thicks that attack have been paid made in the latest at the contract of the House in the latest attack have been paid made in the contract of the House. tleman thinks that attacks have been made upon him in regard to the administration of his office in his representative capacity-if something of that kind were brought before the House—the view of the Chair might be entirely different; but up to this time nothing has been submitted to the House to be read that comes within the rules as a question of personal privilege.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Let me understand the Chair further. I understand the Chair to say that if a member has been attacked in his representative capacity and rises with reference to that, as a question of privilege, that constitutes a question of personal privilege. Now, do I understand the Chair further to hold that in order for that question of personal privilege to arise, it must have to support it or to accompany it some matter in writing or some matter in print?

The SPEAKER. There should be some tangible matter laid before the House, the Chair thinks.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I have laid before the House a statement

The SPEAKER. The gentleman knows well the difference between conclusions and facts. It seems to the Chair that the House should have specific facts before it in order that it may pass upon the question whether the facts thus presented constitute a violation of the privileges of a member of the House. That is the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. DE ARMOND. That brings the question back, it seems to me, to another matter. I have stated to the Chair the fact that these reports have been circulated. Now, I will ask at this point, before going any further, whether that is sufficient upon that

The SPEAKER. Not sufficient in itself, the Chair thinks. The Chair thinks that the specific charges against the gentleman ought to be laid before the House.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Specific charges! Do I understand—The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri will see that there is no tangible thing in the nature of a question of personal privilege before the House. The point of order has been made to that effect, and the Chair has ruled that that does not constitute a question of personal privilege. The gentleman states that he has other documentary matters to lay before the House.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yes, he does; and he asks the opportunity to do so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not desire to deprive the gentleman of the fullest opportunity to lay them before the House, but the point of order which has been made is well taken, as the matter now stands.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Then I want to understand that fully, and to have the House clearly understand it. I understand that the ruling of the Chair is that unless there be some matter in writing or some matter in print, showing that a Representative in his representative capacity has been attacked, he can not properly representative capacity has been attacked, he can not properly rise to a question of personal privilege upon this floor.

The SPEAKER. That is not the position of the Chair at all. The point of order was made against the gentleman's claim that he had a question of personal privilege, when the document that he sent up was read. The Chair is well aware that a member might be attacked physically; that there might be no document

Mr. DE ARMOND. Or a man might be attacked orally, with-

The SPEAKER. He might be attacked orally.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Without any writing.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman has thus far given nothing explicit.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Surely the Chair did not understand me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman stated that certain matters were circulated through his district.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Exactly.

The SPEAKER. Then let the circulated matter be laid before the House, so that the House can have it in a tangible form.

Mr. DE ARMOND. In my statement I did not say anything about documents being circulated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to say so.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I said the story was circulated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will allow the gentleman to pro-The SPEAKER. The Chair will allow the gentleman to proceed, under the ruling, however, that the letter submitted does not, so far as now developed, constitute any question of personal privilege.

Mr. DE ARMOND. If the Chair will permit me, of course I understand that the letter does not do that. I have endeavored to state the question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will now proceed, subject to the point that may be made at any time.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I wish to have read another letter. I wish to have read a few letters of mine and a few of the Department showing that this statement to my detriment is unformeded. ment, showing that this statement to my detriment is unfounded.

Dear Sir. Since writing you a few days ago concerning the appointment of carriers upon the routes running out of Clinton, Henry County, Mo., I have been informed that the postmaster at Windsor, in the same county, has proclaimed that no Democrat need apply for employment as a carrier upon any of the six routes under consideration, with Windsor as the supply point—that all the carriers shall be Republicans. In view of this, I write again to ask that no carriers upon Windsor routes be named without an opportunity being first given to me to be heard upon the subject. I might add what, of course, will be plain enough to you without mention by me—that much dissatisfaction is the result of the course of these two postmasters in this matter. Heretofore, as is matter of general information, contractors for carrying the mails were not confined to any one party, nor were carriers; and it does not seem to be exactly fair or for the good of the service that star routes should be discontinued and rural free-delivery routes established for the benefit of a political party, as narrow partisanship would have it. I can not believe that what is so utterly at variance with the policy which I have understood your Department adopted from the first has your sanction.

Hoping for early reply, and that action at Clinton and Windsor may await further consideration,

I am, very respectfully,

DAVID A. DE ARMOND. BUTLER, Mo., April 9, 1901.

The Clerk read as follows:

DAVID A. DE ARMOND.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Speaker— Mr. GROSVENOR. I wish to make a different point of order. Mr. CROSVENOR. I wish to make a different point of order.
Mr. PAYNE. I do not think the Chair fully apprehended the point of order I made. That was that even the statement of the gentleman from Missouri presents no question of privilege, that it is no part of a Representative's duty to appoint or to recommend carriers for rural free delivery, and the broadest interpretation of the gentleman's statement presents no question of privilege.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The point to which I wish to call the attention of the Chair is exactly in keeping with what the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has said. The rules of the House in defining questions of privilege use this language:

Second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of members individually, in their representative capacity only. Now, is it posssible that when a member invades the jurisdiction of another department of the Government, he being a member of the legislative department only and charged with no duty except that relating to the legislative department—when a mem-ber of this branch of the Government sees fit to invade the jurisdiction of another department and undertakes to manipulate the patronage of that department, his conduct in that behalf not involving moral turpitude in any event—is it possible that such a case can involve a matter of privilege to be brought before this House? Take the matter of free rural delivery. I venture to say there is not a member on this floor against whom complaints have not been made, or through whom complaints have not been made, that one locality has been served in this matter while another locality has not been served, demands being made upon him to know what recommendations he has made. Is it possible that we can fight out our next campaign on this floor by raising questions of this kind under the guise of personal privilege? I think not. When the gentleman from Missouri proceeds to recommend a man for rural free-delivery service, he does not do it in his representative capacity; he does it by the courtesy of the Department, as any other highly respectable gentleman of Missouri might make such recommendations. In no wise does a member might make such recommendations. In no wise does a member in such a case act in his representative capacity.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, upon the question whether this matter is one of personal privilege I tried to make myself understood in the first instance. I have stated that I wished to present a question of personal privilege. I have stated the facts about the circulation of reports prejudicial to me, and unfounded, and I am endeavoring to show that what I stated in that particularis the control of the proposition of the proposit lar is true. I am endeavoring to show it by letters which I wrote to and by letters which I received from the Department in relation to the matter.

I do not claim that the letter just read involves a matter of personal privilege. It is a part of the remarks I am making, rising to a question of personal privilege and addressing myself to the House upon it. Gentlemen on the other side seem to lose sight of a clear and necessary distinction. I am not having those letters read to show a question of personal privilege, but, having stated such a question, I am having these letters read by the Clerk—and I can read them myself if there is any point about that—I am asking to have them read as a part of my remarks and my showing upon this question of personal privilege. That is all there is about it.

The SPEAKER. There are two points of order pending substantially the same. The Chair desires to state that it is a question for the House to decide whether a matter is a question of privilege or not. Many Speakers, for the purpose of saving the time of the House, have passed preliminarily upon questions of this kind. As to the points of order which are pending, the Chair believes that both are well taken. Such matters as that which the gentleman from Missouri is now trying to bring before the House have usually been made matters of "personal explanation" by unanimous consent. The Chair can not see that anything thus far developed by the gentleman constitutes a question of privilege, and thinks that the points of order are well taken.

Mr. DE ARMOND. If the Chair will allow me, I have just read a portion of a letter bearing on this matter, not that I think it necessary to have somebody's letter or somebody's statement to show that a question of personal privilege arises here, but because it seems to be the opinion here that when a member, as a member, upon his responsibility as a member, rises in his place on this floor and makes a statement of a fact he must necessarily submit something in writing or in print about it. Such a posi-tion, it seems to me, is incorrect and unreasonable. I read a portion of this letter bearing on this point. I will read the letter myself, or I will have some one else read it.

Mr. PAYNE. After the statement of the gentleman, and under the broadest interpretation of his statement, as to a question of privilege being shown, I object to any letters being read when there is no question of privilege presented. I object to letters being lugged in here under the guise of the statement of a question of personal privilege after the statement of the gentleman, under the broadest interpretation, has disclosed that there is no such question presented.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] a question or two. I wish to see how far he and I agree in our understanding of a question of personal privilege. Does the gentleman consider that the circulation through the district represented by a member of this House of a report, false and injurious to him in his representative capacity, raises or does not raise a question of personal privilege?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, that is a question entirely different from the question now before the House.

Mr. DE ARMOND. No, sir; it is the very question.
Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman states that reports have been scattered through his district concerning his action in recommending

Mr. DE ARMOND. Not at all. I will enlighten the gentleman. I assume to do so on this matter because apparently he did not hear what I said. I stated that reports were circulated in my district to the effect that before going to the Philippine Islands (I was absent about five months) I caused action in regard to rural free delivery in my district to be held up until I returned. I say that that is false.

Mr. PAYNE. My point is that the gentleman has nothing to do, as a Representative in Congress, with the establishment by the Department of rural free delivery—

Mr. DE ARMOND. The gentleman does not understand my

Mr. PAYNE. Or with the holding up of the free-delivery service.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I am not talking about that. Is the gentleman getting so exceedingly technical as to quibble about the question whether I can hold up or can not hold up the free-delivery service?

Mr. PAYNE. Not at all.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I say the report was circulated that I did so; and I say the report is false.

Mr. PAYNE. I say it is not in the power of the gentleman from Missouri, as a Representative in Congress, or of any other gentleman, as a Representative in Congress, to hold up rural free delivery.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Is it in the power of anybody—
Mr. PAYNE. Anything that a Representative may do in that matter is simply individual action on his part, and any other citizen of good repute might interfere in the same way.

Mr. DE ARMOND. And hold up rural delivery in the entire district. Is that the gentlemen's contention?

Mr. PAYNE. No gentleman can hold it up. It is not in the power of a Representative. It is entirely a matter with the De-power of a Representative. It is entirely a matter with the Department, and not for the gentleman in a representative capacity. It is not his duty as a Representative to appear before any Department.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Now, let me understand the gentleman. I am not discussing the question whether it is or is not in the power of a Representative in Congress to hold up rural free deliv-I am upon the question of whether it is in the power of a somebody or somebodies in the district to circulate to his prejudice a report that he did hold it up. Is that a part of the power of the citizen?

Mr. PAYNE. Nobody in the district can give the gentleman a right of representation which he does not have by law.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I am not talking about that.

Mr. PAYNE. And the rule very wisely provided that these cases could not be called up in this way.

cases could not be called up in this way.

Mr. DE ARMOND. No one in Missouri or elsewhere can give to me any rights which I do not possess as a Representative, but I do hope that no one here will take from me any rights which I do possess as a Representative. I am not now discussing the question whether I can "hold up" rural delivery. I am making no question of personal privilege on that, but I am making it a question of personal privilege that reports of that kind have been circulated in any district and that they were folso and if the circulated in my district, and that they were false, and if the point is made upon me that that is not a question of personal privilege, I would like to hear somebody other than the wise gentleman from New York say it is not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend a moment. There is a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills that is pressing.

ENROLLED BILLS.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

Joint resolution (S. R. 22) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia."

Mr. DE ARMOND. I am about to read, Mr. Speaker, in deference to the expression by the Speaker, in which I do not concur, an extract from a letter upon this question. I will read it myself. The letter is open to the inspection of anybody who desires to see it, and the only reason I do not put it in the Record is because I do not care to disclose, without the consent of the writer first obtained, some matters in it. I will read a few words.

obtained, some matters in it. I will read a few words.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will indulge the gentleman. The Chair desires to give the gentleman every opportunity to bring himself within the rules of the House.

Mr. DE ARMOND. If I can only learn what they are, I will try to bring myself within them. A false report, reflecting upon my conduct and action as a Representative, was circulated in my district, and I am proposing now to show that it is false, and if that is not a question of personal privilege I do not know what could be. But I will read from the letter:

The impression is all around that you are responsible for all the delay in the Sixth district, especially in St. Clair—

One of the counties in the district which I representin reference to rural free delivery.

The letter relates to the subject of free delivery.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have the Clerk read a decision that was made on almost the identical question presented.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

A newspaper having attributed to a member certain remarks which he denied having used, it was decided that no question of privilege was involved. On July 13, 1894, Mr. Allan C. Durborow, of Illinois, as involving a question of privilege, sent to the Clerk's desk and had read an article published in a newspaper in which were attributed to him certain expressions which he denied having used.

Mr. CHARLES H. GROSVENOR, of Ohio, made the point that the article just read did not present a question of privilege.

The Speaker pro tempore sustained the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Now, the Chair thinks that is on all fours with the question presented by the gentleman from Missouri. If with the question presented by the gentleman from Missouri. If the Chair is to admit discussion of every disturbance that a Rep-resentative has within his district over rural free-delivery or postoffice appointments the transaction of the business of this country will soon be prevented by the consideration of such questions.

Therefore the Chair must hold that nothing has been presented by the gentleman that comes within the rule as a question of personal privilege. The remedy of the gentleman is in an appeal from the decision of the Chair, or to ask unanimous consent to make a personal explanation, which the Chair will be glad to submit to the House.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Will the Chair indulge me?
The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled. There must be an end to the matter somewhere.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Will the Chair permit me to suggest that there is nothing in that which has just been read showing whether there is nothing in that which has just been read showing whether there was or was not any question of personal privilege presented in the newspaper article. If there was any question of personal privilege in it the matter read does not disclose it. The decision was that there was none.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. DEADMOND. Exists a private register was registered to take the text to be that Mr. DE ARMOND. First, pending my privilege to take that, Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to make a personal explanation to the House in regard to the matter that has been presented to it, and the Chair gard to the matter that has been presented to it, and the Chair submits the question. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DŁ ARMOND. Now, I would be glad if those letters could be sent to me, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The letter to which the gentleman referred has gone to the Reporters' office.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to present to the House what I endeavored to present as a question of privilege, and what would have been disposed of long ago if I had been permitted thus to present it. As a part of that presentation I will state again, so that those of the House who do not understand-and I am astonished at the lack of understanding in some quarters on the subject—may understand just what I am talking about. I will say again that reports were circulated in the district which I have the honor to represent, during my absence on a visit to the Philippine Islands, that I had caused action upon rural free-delivery routes and carriers to be held up until I returned.

I say that statement is false. I say that some of the people who circulated it lied, and knew that they lied; some were deceived by it, and some hypocritically lent themselves to it. Now, to show the facts about the matter. I am at present enjoying the privilege which the House has extended to me. In order to show the facts, I started to have read certain letters from me to the Department, and others from the Department to me, to bear out the truthfulness of the statement I have made. I have had read my letters of April 6 and April 9. Following those, on the 22d of the same month I sent another letter, which I will

BUTLER, Mo., April 22, 1901.

SIR: Not having received any reply to either of my letters to you, the one of the 6th and the other of the 9th of this month, in relation to the course of the postmasters at Clinton and Windsor, in Henry County, this State, in taking it upon themselves to ignore the declared policy of your Department to divide the rural free-delivery carriers between the parties, I take the liberty to recommend that, with respect to the carrier service out of Clinton, Thomas Frazer, of Clinton, be employed instead of G. A. Brock, of Clinton; that Henry Horn, of Montrose, be employed instead of Jesse Yates; that Orville Wall, of Calboun, be employed instead of Ernest Ritchey; and that H. H. Page, of Brownington, be employed instead of R. V. Welch, of Clinton, making my recommendations in the order here given. Those whom I recommend are Democrats; those in whose stead I recommend them are Republicans. Every one of those whom I recommend is thoroughly qualified and in no way objectionable, unless these places are held to belong to Republicans, and that I can not believe, since I see no good reason for such a change of policy, and I have a right, I think, to conclude that the change has not been made, since you have not so informed me. I hope I may hear from you at your early convenience. you have not venience.

Very respectfully,

DAVID A. DE ARMOND.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

None of these letters, of April 6, April 9, April 22, elicited any acknowledgment or reply. To show that a knowledge of my residence existed in official quarters, and that it was known that I could be reached, and to show further that the Department did not rely upon me as to discontinuing post-offices, I will read a letter written the 1st of April, and also the answer, dated the 9th of April:

BUTLER, Mo., April 1, 1901. DEAR SIR: I am advised by Mr. Jones, postmaster at Quarles, in Henry County, Mo., that a remonstrance has gone in to you, numerously signed by patrons of the offices of Quarles, Shawnee Mound, and Postoak, protesting against the discontinuance of service by the star route by which these offices are at present supplied, and representing that the proposed discontinuance will, among other things, delay the arrival and departure of mails twenty-four hours. As requested, I invite your careful consideration of the whole matter involved, about which I judge you will be fully informed, as I am told by Mr. Jones that your special agent has been upon the ground, and, I presume, has heard both or all sides, in addition to making special investigation of the field to be affected. My hope and wish is that justice to all and the best interests of all may be secured, and that is attainable only by full consideration of all involved. Inopethat every reasonable effort will be made to harmonize conflicting interests, so far as may be practicable and proper.

Very respectfully,

DANDA DE ARMOND

DAVID A. DE ARMOND.

Hon. FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

Post-Office Department,
First Assistant Postmaster-General,
Office of Superintendent Free-Delivery System,
Washington, April 9, 1901.

Hon. D. A. DE ARMOND, M. C., Butler, Mo.

Hon. D. A. DE ARMOND, M. C., Butler, Mo.

SIR: In reply to your favor of the 1st instant, relative to the protest sent this office protesting against the discontinuance of star route No. 45022, Postoak, by Shawnee Mound and Quarles, to Clinton, you are informed that the star route named was discontinued in connection with the establishment of rural free delivery from Clinton, Mo., which service will be effective April 15, 1901.

You are further informed that this star route was recommended discontinued after a personal examination by Special Agent W. F. Conger. The rural free-delivery carrier from Clinton leaves that office at 7.15 a. m., traveling direct to Quarles and Fairmount, returning to Clinton at 3 p. m. The former star-route carrier left Postoak at 7 a. m., arriving at Clinton at 12 m., leaving at 1 p. m., returning to Postoak at 6 p. m. Postoak, being on the railroad, receives its supply in that manner, and the Department can readily see why the postmaster at Postoak should file a protest, in view of the fact that he might lose the cancellation of mails formerly sent by star-route carrier from Shawnee Mound and Quarles. The Department receives numbers of such protests from postmasters, but, upon examination, it is usually found that the personal interests of the postmasters prompt them to such action. You can readily see that the continuation of this star-route service will be a duplication of service in this territory, at an additional cost of $268, the amount paid the star-route carrier.

Hoping this explanation will be satisfactory to you, I am, Very respectfully,

J. M. MASTEN, Acting First Assistant Postmaster-General.

That shows that the Department had my address at that time and knew where to find me.

Upon the 18th of April I received a letter from the special agent looking over rural free-delivery matters in my district, to which I made reply, which I will read:

BUTLER, Mo., April 19, 1001.

Mr. THOMAS HOWARD, Special Agent Post-Office Department, Windsor, Mo.

Mr. Thomas Howard,

Special Agent Post-Office Department, Windsor, Mo., asking my concurrence in a recommendation that the offices of Sparrow, Alberta, Quarles, Huntingdale, and Hortense be discontinued on account of the establishment of certain rural free-delivery routes from Clinton, Mo., and while I wish to continue to help toward the opening of rural delivery routes wherever the people interested would like to have them, I think I ought to give to those who may object to the discontinuance of any office or offices a chance to be heard before I make any recommendation in the matter. There was opposition to the discontinuance of the Quarles office; do you know whether it has subsided? I hope that, in fairness to all concerned, I may be able to act soon.

When the first rural free-delivery route out of Clinton was established, two carriers, the one a Republican, the other a Democrat, were selected, to the satisfaction of both parties. Later, I understand, the postmaster at Clinton has concluded that he will see that Republicans only shall be chosen for carriers upon the other routes out of Windsor.

In view of this, and of the declared policy of the Department to divide the carriers between the parties so as to give to each approximately the same number, may I ask whether you are recommending for carriers those named by these postmasters, without giving the Democrats their fair proportion, and of their own selection? I ask that one-half of the carriers those named by these postmasters, without giving the Democrats their fair proportion, and of their own selection? I ask that one-half of the carriers from Clinton and one-half of those from Windsor be Democrats, satisfactory to those authorized to speak for the party; and I ask the same throughout this Congressional district. I would like to hear from you in regard to this matter, and I assure you that there will be no effort to impose upon you or the service persons who are not worthy and well qualified for the carriers force. If (as I can not believe) you inte

This dwarfed child in the civil-service household took his cue, I suppose, from his superiors, or was instructed by the bosses who instruct all of them, and did not deign to reply.

On the 4th of July, not yet having any reply to my letters, I addressed another letter to that same autocratic Department of the Government, which I will read: BUTLER, Mo., July 4, 1901.

SIR: A friend in Windsor, Mo., has furnished me with a copy of a late letter of the Acting First Assistant Postmaster-General to the postmaster at Windsor, in which it is stated that a case mentioned in the letter of the Windsor postmaster, to which the letter of the Acting First Assistant is a reply, being one of rural free delivery out of that place, "is held up in the files of this office awaiting Congressional concurrence in the discontinuance of the post-offices at Yolo and Port Lyon," and that "this matter has been taken up by the Department with the proper authorities."

Of course, I am not at all surprised that neither the First Assistant Postmaster-General nor the Acting First Assistant Postmaster-General has seen fit to say to me directly what is said to the Windsor postmaster, in the letter from which I have quoted; for have not three several letters of mine, directed to the First Assistant Postmaster-General, and relating, among other things, to rural free-delivery matters at Windsor, failed to move the First Assistant, nominal or acting, to the simple, official courtesy of so much as a word in reply or acknowledgment of receipt of any of the three letters' So, advised thus indirectly that you await the concurrence of a member of Congress whose official letters you or your substitute, or both, lack the grace to treat with even scant courtesy, and being informed that Yolo may be discontinued without impropriety, I formally tender the First Assistant Postmaster-General, whether nominal or acting, my concurrence in the discontinuance of the office of Yolo, upon the establishment of rural free delivery in its territory, and for the supply, among others, of its patrons. Fort Lyon is in the Congressional district represented by Judge COONEY.

Respectfully,

DAVID A. DE ARMOND.

The First Assistant Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

Upon the 10th of July I sailed from New York for the Philippine Islands. After my departure certain letters from the Deartment were received at my home, and came under my notice for the first time a few days ago.

This is the first of them.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT FREE-DELIVERY SYSTEM,
Washington, July 3, 1901.

Hon. D. A. DE ARMOND, M. C., Butler, Mo.

DEAR SIR: I take pleasure in informing you that the rural free-delivery service has this day been ordered extended from Clinton, Henry County, Mo., with seven additional carriers, to commence on Thursday, August 1, 1901.

Very respectfully,

W. M. JOHNSON, First Assistant Postmaster-General.

And this the next:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT FREE-DELIVERY SYSTEM,
Washington, July 6, 1901.

Hon. D. A. DE ARMOND, M. C., Butler, Mo.

DEAR SIR: Department letter of July 3, notifying you of the extension of rural free delivery from Clinton, Henry County, Mo., was issued in error. This matter will be held up, as agreed upon in conference with the Postmaster-General, until the question submitted by you can be fully considered.

Very respectfully,

A. W. MACHEN, General Superintendent Free Delivery.

It is to be observed that the pleasure which pervaded and brightened the sanctum of the First Assistant Postmaster-General on July 3, like so many other blissful things of this life, was transient and fleeting, because on July 6, it was discovered that the letter was issued in error, and it was announced that—this matter will be held up, as agreed upon in conference with the Postmas-ter-General, until the question submitted by you can be fully considered.

Now, another letter came to my home during my absence and came to my notice only upon my return. That is under date of July 13, and is from the same source. It is as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT FREE-DELIVERY SYSTEM,
Washington, July 13, 1901.

Hon. D. A. DE ARMOND, M. C., Butler, Mo.

Sir. I have your communication of the 4th instant, relative to Windsor (Mo.) case. In reply you are informed that the letters to which you refer received my personal attention. I will make final reply as soon as the matter can be presented to the Postmaster-General for a decision. In the meantime the establishment of all cases in your district will be held up.

Very respectfully,

A W MACHEN.

A. W. MACHEN, General Superintendent.

It will be noted that in this letter of July 13, mailed three days after I sailed, and when I suppose it was known that I had sailed, reference is made to my three April letters which remained unanswered; and I am informed that

The letters to which you (I) refer received my (his) personal attention.

It will be observed that in the letter of July 6 we are informed

The matter will be held up as agreed upon in conference with the Post-master-General until the question submitted by you can be fully considered.

In the letter of July 13 it is said:

I will make final reply as soon as the matter can be presented to the Post-master-General for a decision.

This little discrepancy I leave to the gentlemen who made it. On this point I am left somewhat in doubt, in view of the fact that the Postmaster-General has just severed his relations, or given notice that he will sever them, with the present Adminis-tration. I have been wondering whether he has been worn out and, weary with his great labor over this important question, has finally retired for a much-needed rest, or whether, after long wrestling with the question and endeavoring to solve it, he has been forced on account of its tremendous intricacy to give it up and has gone out because he can not solve it. [Laughter.] The question is, Do you still, or do you not, adhere to that oft-repeated declaration that in the appointment of rural free-delivery carriers you will divide them among the parties with approximate equality?

Sometimes I think that the Postmaster-General is retiring because he is tired out by the consideration of this great problem, in the effort to work which he has worn himself down to a frazzle.

[Laughter.] At other times I think he may be in vigorous health, but that, proud as he is, confident of his own resources, as he has shown himself to be, he has determined after long trial that he can not solve the problem, and so has gone out in disgust and desmair. and despair.

In view of these two letters, in view of the conflict between them—I refer to the letters of the 6th and of the 13th of July it is possible that the attention of the Postmaster-General was not called to the matter at all. About that point I am in doubt.

Under date of October 17, 1991, a letter was sent to me, which

I also received after my return.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
OFFICE OF GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT FIRE-DELIVERY SYSTEM, DIVISION OF RURAL DELIVERY,
Washington, October 17, 1901.

Hon. D. A. DE ARMOND, M. C., Butler, Mo.

DEAR SIE: I take pleasure in informing you that the rural free-delivery service has this day been ordered extended from Butler, Bates County, Mo., with seven additional carriers, to commence on Monday, December 2, 1901.

Very respectfully,

W. M. JOHNSON, First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Now, I only wish to say, in conclusion, that I think this series letters—or lack of letters to some extent—show several things conclusively: First, that I did not hold up the establishment of the rural free-delivery routes in my district; second, that the Department did not act frankly or fairly or in a manly way in this matter; that the Department did not answer and has not answered a pertinent question which I had a right to ask; third, that the Department, if it has not done so directly by words, has lent itself consciously to misrepresentations circulated in my district concerning me and my official action. I think I know the

I think I know that certain Republican "bosses" in Missouri, hoping that one of them, the chief of them, may get into the United States Senate from that State by the methods of a "boss, as some of his ilk have got there from other States, has been holding up the Post-Office Department, using creatures like Howard, and causing official gentlemen to forget the ordinary courtesies of official life, and to be guilty of what I regard as shameful duplicity and hypocrisy and cowardice.

If it should be more that the Decident of the United States

If it should happen that the President of the United States, glancing over the RECORD to-morrow morning, accidentally or otherwise, may allow his eye to rest upon the page which shall relate this story, I hope he will take it into consideration, in connection with his general interest in civil-service reform and the purity of the civil service.

Here is evidence of a deliberate plan-not a bold, manly plan; not the plan of an open, aggressive partisan, but the plan of a sneak—to load up the carrier service with the henchmen of one political party, to peddle the literature of that party, to act as canvassers for newspapers for that party; and then, when the work is done, the final capsheaf will be the fixing of them in the great civil service. I do not care to be the victim; I do not care to stand as the scapegoat, in any degree, for this kind of duplicity,

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Is the gentleman aware of any instance in which a Democratic Administration has appointed Republicans to office except under the civil-service system?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yes, I am aware of instances of that kind.

I am aware of no instance where a Democratic Administration, or a Democrat in office, or any Republican Administration, or any branch of a Republican Administration, except the particular set of fellows to whom I am alluding, have ever done as contemptible things, by as contemptible means, as those disclosed in this case.

I did not raise, and do not now raise, the question whether Democrats or Republicans should be appointed. If you are going Democrats of Republicans should be appointed. If you are going to appoint Republicans, let it be done in an open, manly way, as you, Mr. Speaker, would do it if you undertook to do anything of that kind. Do not do it as a coward and a sneak and under hypocritical pretenses.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. DE ARMOND. What is it?
Mr. BARTHOLDT. Whether under a Democratic Administration a Republican has ever been appointed to a subordinate office under the Government excepting under the civil-service

Mr. DE ARMOND. Oh, yes. Mr. SULZER. It was done in the case of the postmaster at New York City

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am speaking of subordinate offices, not offices requiring special talents.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yes, it is true that such appointments have been made; but in view of the fact that the civil service was first loaded up with Republicans, and then "cinched" by was first loaded up with Republicans, and then "cinched by placing those officials under the civil-service law—in view of the fact that the Departments have been gorged with such officials, and were before the law applied to them—I do not care (because I am upon another subject) to expose any Democratic official by going into details of just when he made such appointments, or how many of them he made. I do not care to attack him in that sort of way. My judgment is that no Democrat in office, considering how Republicans have used their patronage, ought to appoint a Republican to any position, provided he can find a Demrat qualified for the place.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. And does the gentleman object to the Republicans following a similar rule?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Let me ask the gentleman this question (as he seems to want to enter upon this side issue), whether he thinks it is the right way to appoint people of his party openly and boldly, or whether it should be done by hypocrisy, deceit, and false pretenses?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I do not admit that any hypocrisy— Mr. DE ARMOND. I am not asking the gentleman to admit anything; the fact is already proven; the plea of guilty is unnecessary now. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will say this: That if it was ever attempted by the Post-Office Department to appoint a Democrat in my district as a rural mail carrier I would most emphatically enter my protest against it. [Applause.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. That is all very well. I am very glad to have the gentleman's protest recorded. It rather adds spice to this performance.

But, Mr. Speaker, I have detained the House longer than I desired and longer than I would have done but for certain interruptions and delays for which I am not accountable. I believe that those who wish to learn the truth of this matter will be enabled to do so by glancing over the RECORD. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

BUSINESS OF POST-OFFICE COMMITTEE.

Mr. LOUD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads be authorized to have printed and bound such papers and documents for use of said committee as it may deem necessary in connection with subjects considered or to be considered by said committee during the Fifty-seventh Congress.

ISTHMIAN CANAL.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House bill 3110, a bill to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, may be made the special order for Tuesday, the 7th day of January, to continue to be the special order until the bill is disposed of; not to interfere, however, with revenue bills or appropriation bills.

Mr. CANNON. Pending this request, I should be glad to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. I should like to know whether, in his opinion, the passing of this bill through the House prior to the acquisition of the right of way for the construction of this canal would tend to embarrass the Executive in securing that right of way by treaty, or whether it would enhance the price to be paid for that right of way, or would make more severe price to be paid for that right of way, or would make more severe the terms upon which we may secure it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I know of no pending negotiations that would in any way be interfered with by consent to this proposition of mine. On the contrary, I think that legislation of this kind must precede the securing of the right of way. The bill provides a means by which the President may acquire the right of way and control over that strip of territory that would be required for the expension of this work. I would further say that the for the execution of this work. I would further say that the President, in his message, said that a treaty would be laid before the Senate in a few days which, when ratified, would remove all I would further say that the the barriers to the construction of this canal; and that treaty was ratified on Monday last.

Mr. CANNON. I have noticed in the public prints—at least it is my impression that I have noticed it there, or heard it otherwise—that a treaty was being considered between the United States and Nicaragua and Costa Rica looking toward the securing of the right of way for the construction of the canal. not advised as to how far the treaty-making power in the first instance has proceeded, if at all, and my only object in asking the question is this: It is perfectly patent to everybody that if the right of way has not been obtained it should be obtained, and the more doubt we could have in the premises from our standpoint in making the bargain, pending the procuring of the right of way, perhaps the more favorable contract we might make.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am advised, those whom we have selected to advise us upon this question have determined that there is no alternative. I understand the gentleman's inquiry to be, May we not, by holding out the fear that another route may be selected, thereby make the Nicaraguan and Costa Rican Governments less tenacious, less insistent upon a high price that they might demand for the rights we want? think that question has been fully set at rest by the two commissions that we have had—the Nicaraguan Commission of three or four years ago and the Isthmian Commission that has just put its report upon our table. There is no other route, if these gentle-men are to be regarded as authority, and so we can gain nothing by making less certain our purpose or by delaying this bill.

Mr. CANNON. I am not informed as to the status of the negotiations, except as I gather it from the public prints. I am quite content with the public sentiment that indorses and requires the construction of an isthmian canal, but I also believe that the United States should have supreme control over the route, with such territory adjacent thereto as may be necessary for the maintenance of that canal. Now, to pass a bill here before we get that treaty, absolutely to locate the canal or authorize its location, to authorize the President to get the right of way and make an indefinite appropriation, might, it seems to me, cause the Nicarauguans and Costa Ricans to be more severe in their terms than they would be if we were to await the time with patience until the negotiation which the newspapers say is pending is consummated. I do not know how shrewd those Nicaraguans and Costa Ricans are, but the question arose in my mind. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] has given more attention to the matter than I have, and so I should regard his opinion in the premises with much consideration.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I suppose there never has been a time during the last fifty years that this subject has been engaging the attention of the American people when some objection might not be made. I can conceive that to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] there might be much force in what he has stated; but during the fifty years of attempted legislation there has al-ways been something that has been allowed to intervene to occasion delay. I do not believe there ever will be a time when there may not be something that in the opinion of somebody might make it advisable to postpone the beginning of work, the beginning of doing something. I think the bill which we propose to consider here is necessary to the very purpose that the gentleman understands to be now in prosecution. I do not understand that there is any power that can secure all we desire, which the gentleman involve records as a preliminary of the proposed to the process of the pr tleman simply regards as preliminary and as preceding legisla-tion, without the passage of a bill. This bill authorizes the President to do the very things that are referred to by the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, but I will ask the gentlemen if it is not true that the President has full power under the constitutional clause authorizing him to make treaties by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, with the status as it is, to make this treaty? And in point of fact is not the treaty now in process of

Mr. HEPBURN. Whether it is or not I can not say, but I know of no constitutional power by which the President of the United States can take a dollar from the Treasury of the United States without the consent of this House.

Mr. CANNON. Nor do I; but the power to make a treaty and submit it to the Senate for ratification is ample.

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee and Mr. UNDERWOOD rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this is in no sense a political question. I have conferred with the minority members of the committee having the measure in charge, and also with other gentlemen around me, and there seems to be no objection whatever to the granting of the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. As I understood that request, it simply provides that this bill shall be taken up on Tuesday, the 7th of Japuary, and he made a special and continuing order until 7th of January, and be made a special and continuing order until disposed of. There is no limit fixed for the debate, and no time prescribed for a vote, as I understand the request.

Mr. HEPBURN. There is none.

Mr. HEPBURN. There is none.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then we are to understand that we are to have a fair debate upon the proposition?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly, so far as "the gentleman from Iowa" can control the matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman whether he coupled with the request that the bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HEPBURN. I did not; but I presume that would be the

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I think it ought to be in Committee of the Whole, so as to afford a fair opportunity for amendment

Mr. HEPBURN. Then I will add that to my request.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman adds to his request, that it be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, along the line suggested a moment ago, in reference to its being necessary for the Government of the United States to make a treaty with Nicaragua before we could acquire this territory, I would call the attention of members of the House to the fact that at one time in the history of this country, when it was attempted to acquire the island of Hawaii by a treaty, and the necessary two-thirds vote in the United States Senate could not be obtained, a bill was passed through this House by which the President of the United States was authorized to enter into a solemn compact with the Governwas authorized to enter into a solemn compact with the Government of Hawaii by which we acquired that territory. Some of us were opposed to it. A majority of the people of the United States favored it, and a majority of the representatives in this House and in the Senate of the United States passed the bill, and were unwilling to be balked by one-third of the representatives in that body.

Now, we know that for many years past a gigantic influence has laid itself across the path of this bill. There is no question that the public sentiment of the United States is ready for its passage. They know that this bill can not be defeated in this House and defeated in the Senate by a majority vote, and now they would have us believe that we must wait until a treaty is made by the United States Senate, which requires a two-thirds vote, and we must submit this proposition for the consideration of one-third of the Senate. For that reason I want to say that I agree with the gentleman from Iowa thoroughly that this House ought not to delay its action pending a treaty. It might never be agreed to, and thus they would defeat the will of the people of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me. In debating the question indicated, I have given what was in my own mind touching the construction of this canal, namely, that there must be a place to put it before you can build it. It seemed to me and does seem to me that that place ought to be obtained before we can locate it. However, as this is a request for the consideration of a bill, I do not feel at liberty, with the sentiment of gentlemen around me the other way, to object to the request for unanimous consent to consider the bill as asked for.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. [Applause.]

ASSISTANT CLERK AND STENOGRAPHER TO COMMITTEE ON INVALID PENSIONS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to submit the following resolution, and ask its reference to the Committee on Accounts.

House resolution 73.

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions be authorized to appoint an assistant clerk and stenographer for said committee for the Fifty-seventh Congress at a salary of $6 per day each, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman to ask that it be referred to the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. It will be referred to the Committee on Accounts. It was not necessary to introduce it in the House for that purpose.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general leave to print on the Philippine Island revenue bill, passed yesterday, be given for the next five days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all members have leave to print for five days from yesterday on the bill passed in regard to the Philippine Is-Is there objection?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PAYNE. I will yield a minute to the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want more than a minute.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have objected for two days to this motion, and for good reasons and for just purposes. I objected because the gentleman who now asks and who has repeatedly asked unanimous consent for the members to print speeches for five days as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee reported to this House a unanimous agreement to cut off debate on the Philippine tariff bill after nine hours' debate, thus giving a minute and a half to each member of the House.

The gentleman asked for unanimous consent to this agreement and it was given, but not understandingly by some, at least, on this side, for many members have said to me that they did not hear the gentleman's statement of the agreement and request, and I myself heard but one word from the gentleman, and that was "agreement." Undoubtedly unanimous consent would not have been given to this nine-hour agreement had it been understood on this side. Later the gentleman asked unanimous consent for leave for the members to "print" their speeches for five To this I objected unless the gentleman would agree to a night session, which he refused, saying it was not necessary. And yet I have been besieged to withdraw my objection to his request to print, by both Republicans and Democrats, but to this moment I have refused.

The night session would have relieved the situation some, and the leave to print could have been also had. I thought it was high time to make those who knowingly consented to the nine hours' debate, as well as those who ignorantly or negligently acquiesced, pay the penalty that denying them leave to print imposed, that better results and more vigilance might be had in the future. I objected to this motion because the Democrats of that committee, that great committee, did not protest against this ninecommittee, that great committee, and not protest against this nine-hour agreement in the committee, and protest in the House when it was reported, bringing a substitute measure with them. There was no explanation of this agreement on this side of the House by any Democrat of the committee, though they should have done so. We were entitled to that at least from some one or all of them, so that we could understand what the gentleman from New York was proposing, and its effect and our rights.

was proposing, and its effect and our rights.

I repeat, urged as I am by both Republicans and Democrats, and by numerous Democrats, smarting as they are under this oppressive agreement, and believing as I do that to a certain extent at least greater vigilance will be shown on this side in the future that will protect our rights and those of the people, I withdraw my objection, made from a pure sense of duty, adding that while I desired to debate the Philippine question generally and shall hereafter, I hope, I felt that the short time tendered me should be used on the tariff bill pending desiring all the time under the used on the tariff bill pending, desiring all the time, under the circumstances, to content myself with printing some clippings pertinent to the Philippine question generally.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Is there objection?

Mr. BABCOCK. I renew the objection.
The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks on that bill in the Record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. CANDLER] be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hamilton] be allowed to print a speech he has prepared upon this subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hamilton] be permitted to print a speech upon this question. Is there objection?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. The Chair hears none.
Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I arose to object. I understand that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] has not made any speech; and I do not see why he should have the right to print a speech.
The SPEAKER. The Chair was not aware that the gentleman arose for the purpose of objecting. Objection is made to the request on behalf of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SHATTUC. I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who were at the Philippines this summer may have the opportunity to extend their remarks indefinitely in the RECORD.

[Laughter.]
Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will make that "postponed indefinitely," I have no objection.
Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. PALMER] be allowed to print a speech on that bill in the RECORD. I will say that yesterday I had promised to yield the floor to him for two minutes, so that he could have laid the groundwork for an extension of his remarks in the RECORD. Under these circumstances I ask unanimous consent that he may Under these circumstances I ask unanimous consent that he may have leave to print.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Do I understand that this is to print?

Mr. DALZELL. To print.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, it seems to me that unless the leave were general to print—

Mr. DALZELL. I will say to my friend from Mississippi that the term "extend" applies to all gentlemen who technically, perfunctorily get up and say, "Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of laying the ground for a speech on this subject."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi I have no chiestics.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I have no objection.

Mr. HAY. I object.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Speaker, having done my full duty in the matter of endeavoring to secure general leave to print on this subject in the interest of gentlemen who have prepared remarks upon it, so that they might have an opportunity to print those remarks in the Record, I shall make no further effort in this matter, and move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will not the gentleman from New York withhold that motion for a moment?

Mr. PAYNE. I will.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Green] addressed the House for ten minutes yesterday and asked permission to extend his remarks in the Record. I do not see him in his seat, and I renew that request for him. request for him.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, Mr. Speaker, it seems that no gentleman on this side is to be allowed to extend his remarks, and I insist upon my motion to adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask the gentleman to withhold that motion for just a minute.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York withhold his motion?

Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. PAYNE. I will withhold for a moment.
Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. There has been no objection, Mr. Speaker, on this side to any request to extend remarks in the RECORD. There was an objection made to a request for members to print.

Mr. PAYNE. I fail to see the difference—
Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that everybody who addressed the House be permitted to extend remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PAYNE. I object to that. I want to make one remark in reply to the gentleman from Mississippi. I can not see the distinction between allowing a man to print a speech who merely rises in his place and says "Mr. Speaker" and allowing a man to print his speech in full who does not get that chance to rise and be recognized.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, let me renew my request to make the permission general.

Mr. PAYNE. I renew my motion to adjourn, Mr. Speaker.

The motion of Mr. PAYNE was agreed to; and accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 45 minutes) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Monday, January 6, 1902, at 12 o'clock m.

DEATH OF SENATOR SEWELL, OF NEW JERSEY.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my painful duty to announce to this House the death of that distinguished citizen, soldier, and statesman. Senator WILLIAM J. SEWELL, of the State of New Jersey. His death occurred last Friday a week, at his home, about 9 o'clock in the morning. For months he had heroically struggled against disease, which finally proved too strong for his constitution to longer resist, and he passed away, surrounded by his family, and was laid to rest on the last day of the year, mourned by thousands of people of his own and other States as no other citizen of the State was ever mourned.

I shall not at this time, by any extended remarks, endeavor to express for myself, the people of the State, or the thousands of his associates in business and politics the high appreciation and deep affection entertained for him.

At some other time, under more appropriate conditions, the House will be asked to set aside a part of its time, when the members will be afforded an opportunity to pay such tributes to his memory as is befitting such a life, character, and distinguished public service as was rendered by him to the State, in the service of his country, and the council of the nation.

His untimely death is the greatest loss the State of New Jersey has ever suffered.

As a further mark of esteem, I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. WILLIAM JOYCE SEWELL, a Senator of the United States from the State of New Jersey.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the late Senator SEWELL this House do now adjourn.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate this resolution to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased Senator.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Accordingly, in pursuance of the resolutions (at 12 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock m.

Joint resolution adopted by the Wisconsin legislature at its session in 1901.

Whereas various decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States during the past few years have rendered many of the most important provisions of the interstate-commerce law inoperative, in consequence of which the law in its present form fails to afford the relief to the shipping interests of the country which was the purpose of its enactment; and

Whereas a bill is now pending in the United States Senate, known as S. 1439, commonly called the "Cullom bill," which is understood to have been framed by a member of the Commission with the approval of that body, comprising such amendments to the interstate-commerce act as in its belief will remedy the defects found to exist therein and render it effective in accomplishing the purposes of its original enactment; and

Whereas the said bill has received the indorsements of the principal commercial organizations of this State and of most of the similar organizations of importance throughout the country, and of the national board of trade, and its passage was urgently recommended to Congress by a national convention held at St. Louis November 20 last, consisting of delegates from 10 national trade organizations, representing various lines of business, and 20 of the most important State and local organizations of similar character in this country: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly, the senate concurring, That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to speedly enact said Senate bill No. 1439 into law, and we urgently request that the Senators and members of the House of Representatives from this State cooperate in promoting the passage of said bill, and use their best endeavors in securing for it precedence over other pending legislation as its great public importance demands;

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator from Alabama state what is the scope of the resolution which it is proposed to continue in force?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the resolution has been twice passed by the Senate, and has been executed from time to time. It directs an inquiry to be made in regard to the dealings of certain corporations in the United States with reference to the general subject of an interoceanic canal, and was intended originally to reach certain corporations in the United States, chartered in New York and New Jersey, and as I suppose and still believe in active operation, in an effort to control the general subject of a canal, and also to obstruct and prevent legislation by Congress for the purpose of opening the canal. That is the general purpose of the original resolution. Then further however, it and port of the original resolution. Then, further, however, it authorizes some additional inquiries which are germane or cognate to the same subject.

The object of the present resolution is to enlarge the scope of the inquiry, so as to enable the committee to inquire into a particular feature of certain contracts which have been filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, of which I have copies and which I will ask to have inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

Chairman Transcontinental Association.

Chairman Transcontinental Association.
GEORGE J. GOULD,
President Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Attest: Jos. HELLEN, Secretary pro tempore.

Mr. MORGAN. In the fifth article of these two contracts between the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and pretty nearly all the railroad companies in the United States having communication with the Pacific coast there is a provision to which I will call the attention of the Senate.

Fifth. It is mutually understood and agreed that this contract shall be deemed to have commenced on the 1st day of January, 1888—still in force. I have never heard of its having been terminated.

There is one contract beginning the 1st of January, 1888, and one beginning on the 1st day of October, 1889, which no doubt is still in force. I have never heard of its having been terminated.

Fifth. It is mutually understood and agreed that this contract shall be deemed to have commenced on the 1st day of January, 1888, and to include the earnings from through business on steamers sailing on and after that day, and as to each and all of the foregoing provisions shall continue in force thereafter until ninety days after written notice of the intention to terminate the same shall have been given by either party to the other, with this exception: That if the exclusive contract between the said steamship company and the Panama Railroad Company, so far as it refers to the business of the steamship company between San Francisco, is broken or changed in any respect, or if any other competing line by rail or vessel shall be established between the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, either overland or via the Isthmus of Panama, that shall affect the through business concerning which this agreement is made, then the said party of the first part may abrogate and terminate this agreement at any time or not, as it may elect.

I have searched in vain in every place where I thought it was

I have searched in vain in every place where I thought it was possible to obtain information as to what was this exclusive conpossible to obtain information as to what was this excitative contract with the Panama Railroad Company. In a report made to the House of Representatives by the Hon. John R. Fellows, chairman of the committee of the House, he says that that contract was between the Panama Railroad Company, then and now owned was between the Panama Kahroad Company, then and now owned by the Panama Canal Company, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, whereby they were to have the exclusive right of issu-ing bills of lading for goods passing in transit between New York and San Francisco, either way.

I have not been able to get hold of a copy of that contract, and I shall not be able to get hold of it unless the Senate will empower the committee to send for the persons who know what the contract contains and bring it out before the world. It is perhaps the most wicked monopoly that was ever attempted upon the people of the United States, and it has already cost the people of the Pacific coast millions upon millions of dollars by throwing all the traffic across the continent, whether at Panama or elsewhere, into the hands of the railways and allowing them to fix the rate of freight and passengers across the Isthmus as well as on the steamer lines, and to have a perfect monopoly of all the trade that comes from the Pacific Ocean across this continent or from the Atlantic Ocean across this continent by rail.

When the Senate has considered these two contracts, which I obtained, as I have stated, from the Interstate Commerce Commission, they will see the bearing of the whole matter. By one of these contracts, that of 1888, $65,000 a month was paid by this concert of railroad companies, all of whom are named here, to the Pacific Mail Steamship Line for the privilege of fixing the rate of freight and occupying those ships entirely with their freight, if they choose to put freight upon them, or if not, to compel the people to ship across by rail.

In the latter contract, that of October, 1889, the sum was raised to $75,000 per month, and, so far as I know and believe, that price and that contract stand to-day in full force.

I think it is my duty, Mr. President, to try to get information before the Senate in regard to these matters.

Mr. CULLOM. May I ask the Senator from Alabama a ques-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is not yet before the Senate for consideration. The debate has been proceeding by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the present con-ing by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I was trying to ascertain from the Senator from Alabama the scope of this resolution. The prior resolution, which is specifically referred to in it, had a limited scope, but I understand now, from a reading of this resolution, that the scope of the inquiry is enlarged so as to embrace any subject which may be referred to the committee by the Senate in connection with the canal.

Mr. MORGAN Ves

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to acquire from the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, for and in behalf of the United States, control of such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua as may be desirable and necessary on which to excavate, construct, and protect a canal of such depth and capacity as will be sufficient for the movements of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, from a point near Greytown, on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Brito, on the Pacific Ocean; and such sum as may be necessary to secure such control is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 2. That when the President has secured full control over the territory in section 1 referred to he shall direct the Secretary of War to excavate and construct a canal and waterway from a point on the the shore of the Caribbean Sea, near Greytown, by way of Lake Nicaragua, to a point near Brito, on the Pacific Ocean. Such canal shall be of sufficient capacity and depth as that it may be used by vessels of the largest tonnage and greatest draft now in use, and shall be supplied with all necessary locks and other appliances to meet the necessities of vessels passing from Greytown to Brito; and the Secretary of War shall also construct such safe and commodious harbors at the termin of said canal, and such provisions for defense, as may be necessary for the safety and protection of said canal and harbors.

SEC. 3. That the President shall cause such surveys as may be necessary for said canal and harbors, and in the constructing of the same may employ such persons as he may deem necessary.

SEC. 4. That in the excavation and construction of said canal the San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua, or such parts of each as may be made available, shall be used.

SEC. 5. That in any negotiations with the States of Costa Rica or Nicaragua the President may ha

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me an interruption?

Mr. CANNON rose.

Mr. Cannon rose.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi, and will then yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

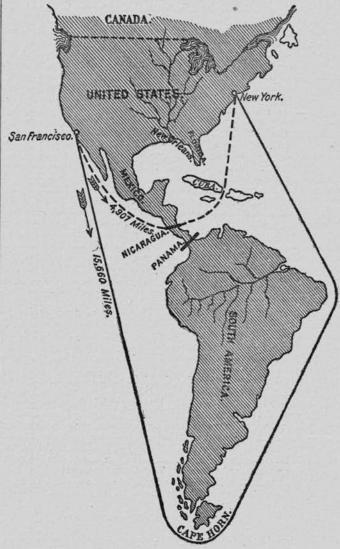

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Permit me to say, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois, that the language of this bill is not "That the President be, and he is hereby, 'directed;'" but it is "That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, 'authorized' to acquire from the States of Nicaragua and Costa Rica," and "pay such sum as may be necessary." There is nothing in this bill to make the President pay an exorbitant or unreasonable amount. The gentleman certainly has confidence in his sonable amount. The gentleman certainly has confidence in his own President. Is he going to concede that a Democrat, and a Southern Democrat at that, has more confidence in the honesty of the President than he himself has? [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.
Mr. CANNON. I suppose that this is an authority conferred, and as is usual when the Legislature confers an authority upon the Chief Magistrate in the usual respectful terms, there is no doubt but what it is mandatory in its nature, and would be so construed.

So much for that. I want to say in reference to the reply that the gentleman from Iowa has made that I recognize the fact that the public sentiment of the United States demands the construction of an isthmian canal, and I now and for many years, on the stump and in this House, have been in complete harmony with that sentiment. I do not accept as accurate the statement of the gentleman that any question of the time of consideration of this bill, or as to apt amendments of the same, is subject to any just criticism that it is for the purpose of legislative delay. I will also say that, in my judgment, the effect of the enactment of this bill would be to give away an advantage that the people of the United States now have— to get from the Government of Nicaragua a route at a reasonable price and upon proper conditions. I believe that the passage of this bill at this day, without this protocol and this condition being made, will result in a disadvantage to the United States Treasury and will lead to great criticism and delay.

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, so much has been said on the subject of a transisthmian canal, and for so many years, and by so many writers and speakers, that nothing remains to be said. Repetition, tedious repetition, is all that is left for one who attempts to discuss the question now. For more than half a century it has been an active topic, not only in this country but throughout the civilized world. Volumes have been dedicated to it; scores of reports by commissions and committees have been made upon it, and columns have been written about it. Let us hope that the time has now arrived for action and that this Congress, upon this subject, at least, will meet the expectations of the American people. In reporting this bill to the House the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce (of which I have the honor to be a member) has called attention to the pledges of the political parties on this subject, and it may not be amiss to do so again.

At its last national convention the Republican party said:

We favor the construction, ownership, control, and protection of an isthmian canal by the Government of the United States. New markets are necessary for the increasing surplus of our farm products; every effort should be made to open and obtain new markets, especially in the Orient, and the Administration is to be warmly commended for its successful efforts to commit all trading and colonizing nations to the policy of the "open door" in China.

And the Democratic party, at Kansas City, said:

We favor the immediate construction, ownership, and control of the Nicaraguan Canal by the United States, and we denounce the insincerity of the plank in the Republican platform for an isthmian canal, in the face of the failure of the Republican majority on this subject to pass such a bill in Congress.

Were these utterances placed in the party platforms merely to make them attractive and popular? Were we trimming our sails make them attractive and popular? Were we trimming our sails merely to catch the passing breeze, or were we giving voice to sincere sentiments and honest purposes? Both of the great political parties have said they favored the construction of a canal, to be owned and controlled by the Government of the United States. We have before us a bill which provides for its construction and for its ownership and control. There is no ambiguity or uncertainty about it. Its provisions admit of no doubt and are easily understood. They are open, straightforward, and plain. For years the great benefit and advantage which would accrue to this country by the opening of a way through the Isthmus has been country by the opening of a way through the Isthmus has been recognized, and yet, moved by one motive or another, all sorts of opposition has been offered.

Chief among the arguments used to defeat the project has been the assertion that we had entered into an agreement with Great Britain which took away from us the right to construct, own, and operate such a canal. It has been claimed that the terms of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty estopped us; that by the terms of that convention it was agreed that the Government of the United States and Great Britain had declared that neither the one nor the other would ever obtain or maintain for itself any exclusive control over such a ship canal, or would ever erect or maintain fortifroi over such a sinp canal, or would ever erect or maintain fortifications upon the same, or would ever fortify or colonize or assume or exercise dominion over Nicaragua or Costa Rica or the Mosquito Coast or any part of Central America for the purpose of constructing such canal. For myself I have not believed for years that we were longer bound by that treaty, but for all present purposes we may admit that this contention was not true, and we may admit that those of us who argued that England had herself violated the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and thereby absolved us from any further obligations to observe it were wrong.

It does not seem to be material now. We have entered into a new agreement, and it is expressly declared in the Hay-Paunce-fote treaty, but recently ratified and now in force, that the reason for making this new convention is to "facilitate the construction of a ship canal to connect the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and to that end to connect the Atlantic and Facine oceans, and to that end to remove any objection which may arise out of the convention of April 19, 1850, commonly called the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, to the construction of such canal under the auspices of the Government of the United States."

We can not feel altogether pleased with the new treaty, but it is the best, perhaps, we can hope to get. It unties our hands if they were tied, and it sets us free if we were bound. Had it been made as an original proposition—that is to say, if it had been the first and original agreement with Great Britain-I should have felt inclined to denounce it.

should have contended for the right of this Government to build this canal without any restrictive agreement with any other nation. But it was not the first treaty. We had previously agreed with the British Empire, in the Clayton-Bulwer convention, that we would never obtain or maintain for ourselves any exclusive control over this canal or seek to obtain such right from the Governments of Central America. England insisted that we were still bound by that convention, and some Americans believed and others affected to believe it. To set this matter at rest, therefore, and to remove all doubt, it may be that the making and approval of the last agreement was best. At any rate, it has been done and there is an end of that matter.

Articles I and II of the new treaty read as follows:

ARTICLE I.

The high contracting parties agree that the present treaty shall supersede the aforementioned convention of the 19th April, 1850.

Article II.

ARTICLE III.

ARTICLE

Now, then, all obstructions and impediments of a contractual nature, so far as the right to construct, own, and operate the canal are concerned, having been removed, are we to build it, and if so—

WHICH CANAL?

Shall it be the Nicaragua, or shall it be the Panama? The last Commission appointed by this Government to investigate and report upon this subject has recently, in a very able report, assured us that either route is feasible and practicable. For some reasons the one and for other reasons the other of the two routes is commended. By way of final comparison, however, the Commission

After considering all the facts developed by the investigations made by the Commission and the actual situation as it now stands, and having in view the terms offered by the new Panama Canal Company, this Commission is of the opinion that "the most practicable and feasible route" for an isthmian canal, to be "under the control, management, and ownership of the United States," is that known as the Nicaragua route.

The price at which the Panama Canal Company held its franchise, its partly finished canal, and its railroad, and the price at which its partly infinited canal, and its railroad, and the price at which it offered these properties to our Commission, was $109,000,000; but since the report was made, and since the introduction of the bill now under discussion, this company, on the principle, perhaps, of getting what it can before it is too late, now offers to sell to us at $40,000,000. In my humble judgment, this should not change our course or for one moment cause us to hesitate. The Nicaragua route, being the northerly one, is nearer to us and most conven-

Physical conditions there are such as give unquestioned assurance of the success of the enterprise. I am afraid this startling proposition of the French company to reduce its price from one hundred and nine millions to forty millions is another shrewd efhundred and nine millions to forty millions is another shrewd effort to induce delay and bring about schisms, conflicts, and confusion in Congress. I am afraid it is a Trojan horse. I do not believe the Panama Canal Company is authorized to sell its franchise to us. In the concession made by the Republic of Colombia to this company it is expressly provided that the privileges given shall not be transferred to any nation or foreign government, and it is further provided that any attempt to do so shall operate as a forfeiture. Moreover, the Panama Canal Company has only a ninetynine years' lease, and if they had the right to sell to us at all they could sell only this leasehold. It would not give us that ownership which we would demand before putting our millions into this enterprise. this enterprise.

The Colombian Government, it is said, has expressed willingness, on some sort of terms, to consent to a transfer of the franchise of the "New Panama Canal Company" to the United States, but doubt and uncertainty exist as to how far Colombia would be willing to go with us. It is practically certain, however, that absolute ownership of the canal, with sufficient contiguous territory, will never be ceded to us in perpetuity.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Do you contend that this offer to the United States by the Panama Canal Company works a forfeiture of their rights?

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. I do. The report of our Isthmian Canal Commission, recently transmitted to Congress, informs us that such a clause exists in the concession given to this canal company by the Government of Colombia; that an offer to sell company by the Government of Colombia; that an offer to sell to any foreign government operates as a forfeiture.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The language is "any attempt to sell."

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. "Any attempt." That is right.

On the other hand, it is apparent that we will have no difficulty in making terms with the Republics of Nicaragua and Costa Rica. It is believed that at this moment protocols between these Governments and ours have been arranged in diplomatic circles. et us therefore not be deterred or diverted from our purpose in this matter, but let us pass the Hepburn bill, which adopts the Nicaraguan route. More than $250,000,000, from the days of De Lesseps to the present time, have been wasted and squandered at Panama. Less than that, so it is estimated, will build and equip the canal which this bill proposes.

DISTANCES SAVED.

I shall not undertake to discuss the question as to whether or I shall not undertake to discuss the question as to whether or not the investment would be a paying one from a purely speculative point of view. It is believed that tolls derived from the use of the canal would be ample for its maintenance and would pay good interest. Entirely aside from this, however, is the great impetus it would give our commerce by the saving of distance on the high seas. I present here a table of distances, in nautical miles, between commercial ports of the world and distances saved by the Nicaragua Canal, which I take from an excellent paper read before the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce by Hon. Hugh Craig:

NECESSITY FOR A CANAL.

This connection between the two great oceans—this passageway between the continents of North and South America—is a pressing necessity. We need it for the convenience and the expansion of our commerce. We need it for the proper handling of our Navy, for bringing nearer together our eastern and western shores, for the protection of our island possessions, and for easy access to them. The American farmer needs it that foreign markets may be opened up for the products of his toil; the merchant and manufacturer that he may compete with rivals in other lands.

General Tracy, when Secretary of the Navy, put the whole question, from a naval point of view, in this very succinct but strong and comprehensive language:

The canal must be built, or two independent navies maintained, one in the Atlantic, the other in the Pacific; and the increased cost of building the Navy and maintaining it would be very much greater than the cost of building the canal.

And now, as to the commercial advantages to this country to be derived from a transisthmian waterway, can I do better than adopt the language of the Hon. Archibald R. Colquhoun, the distinguished English engineer, in his work called The Key to the Pacific?

It will render greater service to the New World than the Suez Canal does to the Old. It will bring Japan, northern China, Australasia, and part of Malaysia nearer to the Atlantic cities of the United States than they are now to England. * * It will give an immense impulse to United States manufactures, especially cotton and iron, and will greatly stimulate the shipbuilding industry and the development of the naval power of the United States.

The canal is a necessity of the age, and were the cost double what I estimate it to be, the immense benefits certain to result would amply justify its execution. It will bind together the remote sections of that immense country, assimilate its diverse interests, go far toward solving many difficult problems, and make the United States still more united. Finally, I believe it will, taken in connection with the vast changes occurring in the Far East, bring about the most serious rivalry to the commercial supremacy of Great Britain which she has ever yet had to encounter.

Our National Treasury, Mr. Chairman, is bursting with a surplus of unneeded dollars. We have something like one hundred and seventy millions cash balance over and above our gold reserve of one hundred and fifty millions. A large surplus is recognized as a danger signal. We will begin to seek for ways to spend it, and will inevitably fall into inexcusable extravagances. Can we do better than to put it into this canal? Can we do anything that will have greater wealth and reverse and wide to our country? will bring greater wealth and power and pride to our country?

I believe that this alleged proposition of the Panama Canal Company, coming to us just at the moment it does, is intended for delay. Every time the passage of an isthmian canal bill has been undertaken, something like this has occurred. Let us proceed to pass this bill without further ado. If it is a wrong step, we can retrace it; but if we fail to provide for the canal at this session, we will disappoint the American people. [Loud ap-

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, public sentiment of the country certainly favors the early construction of the Nicaragua Canal. It can hardly be doubted that a majority of the members of this House, together with the President, heartly indorse this great work. In the last half century volumes have been written and spoken in Congress, in the public press, and otherwise, about building the canal. Hence little additional information can be given the country on the subject.

Action is what is demanded now.

The concise, terse, and able report of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn], chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, who has given years of labor and study, and whose name is so prominently linked with this great project, is accepted by this House and the country as a true and faithful response to the practical business wishes of the people.

More than fifty years ago our Government entered into an agreement with Nicaragua for the construction of a canal uniting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans by way of Lake Nicaragua—practically the same route as the one now under consideration. The facts and conditions that led up to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and the contention of Great Britain under that treaty are familiar to us all. And while it is true that many of the ablest American statesmen have insisted that the claim of Great Britain to the exercise of any rights whatsoever respecting the construction or control of a waterway on this continent was inconsistent with the Monroe doctrine, yet we are happily rid of all this by the ratification of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. And to-day, Mr. Chairman, the people of the United States, on their own responsibility and subject to their control, are about to commence the greatest commercial enterprise in the history of the world—the uniting of the two great oceans for all time to come.

It is, Mr. Chairman, a great project, fraught with vital possi-bilities, not only to our own country, but to the civilized world. There are three bills before the Congress, two introduced at the other end of the Capitol and the bill now under consideration by the House. All of these bills designate the Nicaragua route and authorize the President to take all needful steps to perfect necessary arrangements with Nicaragua and Costa Rica. The Morgan bill of the Senate and the bill under consideration in the House agree on the maximum cost and expenditure of $180,000,000. The Senate bill referred to appropriates $5,000,000 and the House bill $10,000,000 to begin the construction of the work. The chief difference, as I understand it, between these two measures is the manner in which the work can be controlled and directed. The Senate bills intrust it to a board consisting of the Secretary of War and eight other citizens to be appointed by the President, or War and eight other citizens to be appointed by the President, or to five citizens of the United States, not including the Secretary of War. The House bill turns over the construction of the canal to the President and the War Department. In a great public enterprise like this we should be guided by the light of the lamp of experience. The world is familiar with the great scandal that sprung from the skillful jobbery and plunder in the work on the Panama Canal. Great names and brilliant reputations went down in min and disgreece. In the bill new under consideration regree. in ruin and disgrace. In the bill now under consideration responsibility is placed upon the President and the War Department, and this is a guaranty that our interests will be watched.

Another significant feature of the House bill is the authority it gives the Secretary of War to construct at the termini of the canal safe and commodious harbors, with such provisions for defense as may be necessary for the safety and protection of the canal and harbor.

These differences in the two bills are not of such importance as to delay seriously the action of the Congress, and especially when a decisive vote of the members of this House in favor of the

A decisive vote of the members of this House in favor of the Nicaragua Canal will frustrate the machinations and schemes that seek the defeat of this measure, even under the pretense and guise of necessary delay.

Mr. Chairman, it appears to me, from the investigation that I have been able to make, that there are several sound, practical, and unanswerable reasons why the United States should claim that a canal through the American Isthemas should claim that a canal through the American Isthmus shall be an American canal, to be built, owned, and protected by the United States. It can not be denied that the republics in all the Americas, all of which are maritime states, have the right to insist that the power that controls the canal and is responsible for its management shall be American, as the powers that control the Suez Canal are European, without having to cross an ocean to assert their rights when they are violated.

The question of financial and physical ability is an important factor in this matter. We know that the United States is the only power in America that has the means to build a canal and the strength to protect and defend it by sea and by land after it is It is a safe estimate for us to make that the United completed.

States will pass more commerce through the canal than all the other American states combined.

Our Government also is the only power that has a communicating coast-line traffic, or an interchange of its own productions, on both the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. Its coast-line navigation is shortened 10,000 miles when the canal is opened. Besides this it is the only American power that has and must maintain fleets on both oceans.

Our extensive possessions in the Atlantic and Pacific and in the Gulf of Mexico require connection by short lines of water com-

Ours is the only power in the world that has resolved to build a canal across the American Isthmus with money drawn from its own Treasury, and it is the only power in the world that could venture to shoulder such a burden. Great Britain has certainly abandoned the purpose, if it ever existed, and has admitted the exclusive right and duty of the United States to construct, own, and control the canal.

Mr. Chairman, these well-known facts vindicate the right and duty of the United States as the American State that must do this great work. When President Monroe declared that any this great work. When President Monroe declared that any effort on the part of the Holy Alliance to acquire territory in this hemisphere would be accepted as an unfriendly act to our Government he proclaimed a doctrine that stands to-day as the only guaranty and security that the American republics have of the preservation of free, sovereign, and independent government. A canal constructed and owned by any state foreign to that in which it is located is bound to require from such foreign state a guaranty of the preservation of the coverignt of the state that guaranty of the protection of the sovereignty of the state that grants the concession; hence no Central American state could accept such a guaranty from a transoceanic power without serious and manifest danger to the Monroe doctrine or even its abandonment. It would be unwise and contrary to statesmanship and safety for the United States to permit such conditions to arise or exist as will or may ultimately lead to the absorption to arise or exist as will or may ultimately lead to the absorption of an American republic into a European or Asiatic monarchy, and no plan could be devised that would more certainly end in that result. I think, Mr. Chairman, that it can be stated that no work, great or small, was ever more thoroughly or critically examined and inquired into in advance of actual construction than the two routes at Panama and Nicaragua. The surveys as described in the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission are so exact and convincing that the engineering questions involved in a comparison of the two routes are reduced to a certainty as to

The result as to computation and measurement furnishes a safe and reliable basis of the estimate of expenditure as to both routes, and Congress can make its appropriation with a confidence unprecedented in a work of such magnitude. Some people wildly think and say that the opening of a canal through the Isthmus means an unlimited and ceaseless expenditure of the people's money, but the truth, as it has been demonstrated by some of the greatest engineers in the world, is convincing, clear, and satisfactory in support of their estimates. It appears therefore that factory in support of their estimates. It appears, therefore, that there is no real ground for apprehension on this line.

It is a persuasive fact that every survey made of the Nicaragua route is in substantial correspondence with every other survey on the estimate of cost or expenditure, the only difference result-ing from the length and dimensions of the canal as projected in the different surveys. The agreement of all these surveys in the important essentials of measurements, quantity of water, its source of supply and how affected by the varying seasons, excavations and embankments, the quantities of earth, loose and solid rock to be removed, demonstrate the reliability of such estimates.

If, in view of these facts, Congress still has doubt of the feasi-bility, practicability, and cost of the Nicaragua Canal, then it is bound to have far greater doubt as to the Panama Canal, which has been pronounced against, I believe, by every party of engi-neers and every commission the Government has sent out, and by engineers employed by other governments to survey, locate, and ascertain the cost of a lock canal. It appears, then, that doubts and apprehensions constitute the chief ground on which the opponents to the Nicaragua Canal rest their case. No security can be given that can defy all unseen causes of obstruction and delay, nor can actual demonstration be made in advance of any great work like this. But, Mr. Chairman, there is one matter around which the shadows of a doubt do not gather; it is that the American people demand the opening of the waterway to connect the two great oceans of the world, and they demand that Con-gress shall appropriate their money to this national work. Mr. Chairman, this is a marked period of national development and improvement. It behoves us, not only for the betterment of individual interests, but in a spirit of national pride and love of country, to reach out for such commercial acquisitions as will contribute to the strength and glory of our Republic. There is to-day a general alarm in the island of Great Britain, and her political speakers, the public press, the pulpit, and commercial bodies are all crying out that something must be done to check the decadence of British trade. It is undoubtedly a fact that the United States and Germany are outstripping the British Isles and are capturing the markets of the world.

For the ten months of 1901 ending the 31st of October the returns show a decrease of imports and exports in British trade of a little less than $58,000,000, as compared with same period for last year. It is in this connection that I refer to the impetus that the construction of the Nicaragua Canal will give to our commercial interests and growth. It is right for us to judge of the future by the past. The discussion of this canal by the statesmen of our country was really coeval with the date of our national existence. From that time to the present our growth from thirteen colonies to forty-five magnificent, independent, and sovereign States has challenged the wonder and admiration of the world. We have, without friction and without disturbing the theory of our republican form of government, carved out of empires of territory acquired by conquest and purchase splendid States, prototypes of the original States. We have as a nation, under the guidance of God, met and overcome all national dangers and waxed stronger day by day and way have a part of the control of th day by day and year by year. The war between the States that shook with a giant strength the foundations of our republican institutions cast its dark shadows of sorrow and tears across our national pathway, but we rejoice to know that the burning passions and depressing gloom of that fearful struggle have vanished in the sunshine and love of a reunited people. To-day I believe we stand in the dawning light of a new era of national growth and prosperity.

The building of the Nicaragua Canal, a project—the immensity of which the human mind can scarcely grasp-brings to us this glittering vista.

The war with Spain came as but the forerunner of our latent and undeveloped power. It revealed to us our hidden prospects and declared our manifest destiny. It is a mistake to say that the war with Spain made us a world power. It was but an expression of a long-cherished and carefully nursed national yearning to possess Cuba. We needed Cuba in our Government business; and as long as the island was or will be in the hands of another Government it will be a menace to our institutions and our growth. I hold, Mr. Chairman, in my hands a bill for which eminent Cubans will ask the consideration of Congress, entitled "An act to promote the prosperity of Cuba and extend the markets for American products."

The language of President McKinley's message of December 5, 1899, may well be recalled at this time: "This nation has assumed 1899, may well be recalled at this time: "This nation has assumed before the world a grave responsibility for the future good government of Cuba. We have accepted a trust, the fulfillment of which calls for the sternest integrity of purpose and the exercise of the highest wisdom. The new Cuba, yet to arise from the ashes of the past, must needs be bound to us by ties of singular intimacy and strength if its enduring welfare is to be assured. Whether those ties shall be organic or conventional, the destinies of Cuba are in some rightful form and manner irrevocably linked with our own, but how and how for is for the future to deterwith our own, but how, and how far, is for the future to determine in the ripeness of events."

It is an admitted fact to-day that the great obstacle to the prosperity of Cuba now and in the future is found in its commercial relations with the United States; that prosperity depends upon Cuba finding a fair market for its principal products—sugar and tobacco. Market for those products under existing conditions can be found only in the United States. The question is,

How shall we fulfill our trust?

I sincerely believe, Mr. Chairman, that the best way for the United States to meet that "grave responsibility" with due regard for all our national obligations and "To promote the prosperity of Cuba and extend the markets of American products" is for the United States to confer statehood upon Cuba at the earliest practicable date, and forever settle the vexed and very perplexing question of a reciprocal tariff—with all the benefits on our side our side.

Surely the most hypercritical friends of the inalienable rights of man could not say that we had violated any national pledge if we conferred on Cuba the rights and blessings of that form of government that it has taken us a century and a quarter to build and perfect for ourselves.

I do not understand, Mr. Chairman, that our Government is I do not understand, Mr. Chairman, that our Government is now or will become a military power because we have attained an influential position among the nations of the world. I believe that with the aid of the Nicaragua Canal our country will become not "a power of bloodshed and arms," but a great commercial power that will bring to us wealth and the trophies of peace, Primarily and directly the States of the South will be the greatest beneficiaries of the Nicaragua Canal. And no State, I dare say, will realize greater benefits than Alabama, which I have the honor in part to represent on this floor. There is no sectional the honor in part to represent on this floor. There is no sectional feeling or politics in this great movement. We have reached that time in our national growth that a benefit to one section of the Union is accepted as a benefit to the whole country. The South is full of promise, and untold wealth, power, and glory awaits its development. I do not hesitate to say that there is no spot or locality on earth, with equal size of Alabama (something over 51,000 square miles) to which the future holds out such promises of wealth.

Our geographical situation, great resources of iron, ore, and coal, splendid forests of yellow pine, walnut, cherry, oak, maple, and other hard woods, our fertile lands that bountifully produce and other hard woods, our fertile lands that bountifully produce rice, oats, wheat, rye, tobacco, cotton, and corn, with our splendid water, all these indicate our future growth. It is an increased commerce and trade that the South wants. Give us the Nicaragua Canal and our just share of the trade of the Orient, and twenty, yea thirty million bales of cotton in the South will not be a surplus, and 5-cent cotton will become a memory of the past, while 12-cent cotton will come to stay.

Commenting on the statement that the stretch of country from

Commenting on the statement that the stretch of country from Wheeling, W. Va., to Birmingham, Ala., contains forty times as much coal as Great Britain had before she stuck a pick in the ground, the New York Journal of Commerce takes occasion to say of the South's wealth and advantages:

West Virgina alone has 16,000 square miles of coal, as compared with Great Britain's 12,000. The South has nearly one-half the standing timber of the United States. It holds a practical monopoly of the production of cotton, furnishing three-fourths of all the staple required for the 100,000,000 spindles in the world. It has almost a monopoly of the phosphate rock, which is the foundation of the fertilizer business both in this country and in Europe; and now the Gulf and Atlantic coasts have in Texas and in other localities a fuel supply calculated to meet any possible demand of industrial progress.

In spite of the circumstances that have operated to discourage the investment of capital in the South, its cotton mills represented in 1900 a money value of $15,000,000, against $61,000,000 a decade earlier; the consumption of cotton in these mills 1,597,112, against 546,894 bales in 1890. The number of spindles employed in 1900 was 6,200,000, against 1,712,930 in 1890. The number of spindles employed in 1900 was 6,200,000, against 1,712,930 in 1890. The railroad mileage in the South has increased in the same ten years from 42,825 to 53,000 miles. The amount of coal mined has increased from 21,500,000 to 48,192,053 tons, and the amount of pig iron produced from 1,953,459 to 2,604,671 tons. The same ten years saw an increase in value of the agricultural products of the South from $666,000,000 to $1,200,000,000, and in the value of exports from Southern ports from $315,621,008 to $530,317,545.

But I furnish still more recent data, down to August 31, 1901, which discloses the astonishing fact that the cotton bales consumed by the Southern mills are 45.17 of the total consumed in American mills.

GAINING IN MANUFACTURING.

The gain the South has made in the matter of cotton manufacturing will be observed from the following table:

1892 1893 1894 1895 1896 1897 1898 1899	Bales. 2, 190, 766 1, 687, 286 1, 601, 173 2, 083, 839 1, 600, 271 1, 804, 680 2, 211, 740 2, 190, 095 2, 068, 300 1, 966, 897	Bales. 686, 080 743, 848 718, 515 862, 838 904, 701 1, 042, 677 1, 231, 841 1, 399, 396 1, 597, 112 1, 620, 931

These are some of the features and lines of Southern progress that makes glad the Southern heart and causes us to hail with joy the building of the Nicaragua Canal. There need not as yet be any unbecoming spirit of rivalry between Northern and Southern will a few the result of half lines. mills, for the result of both sections combined have not yet captured our home market, because $34,000,000 worth of cotton goods were shipped into this country last year.

Mr. Chairman, there is another feature that I consider a strong inducement for acceptance of the Nicaragua route. It is this: If we could finish the Panama Canal under the most satisfactory conditions to the United States, we would certainly be confronted with danger that would not arise if the canal is located on the Nicaragua route.

Europe and Asia would most likely unite in furnishing money to Costa Rica and Nicaragua to open a canal on terms of disadvantage to our commerce. This is so easily practicable that we would certainly expect it. If this should be done, what would be the natural result? Most likely the Central American States would reunite in a confederation or become annexed to Mexico, and in either event we would have a formidable commercial enemy if not a worse one in our path, with Europe and Asia at their backs. But, it is asked, Why is this not as likely to occur at Panama. if the canal is located at Nicaragua? The answer is patent: Great Britain does not want France to control any American canal, a fact that had much to do with the revocation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. It is believed if Colombia should attempt to borrow money in Europe to build an American canal she would have to pay the French stockholders in the Panama Canal a very large amount of money for what they have expended. This Colombia could not do.

The incumbrance of this French claim is too heavy a handicap on the Panama route to make a canal there a competitor with the canal at the Nicaragua route for a long time to come, if not for all time. But a still stronger reason is that the Nicaragua Canal is 600 miles nearer to our eastern frontier, and 350 miles nearer our western frontier than the Panama Canal. This, according to most reasonable computation, means five days more for steamers of average speed and fifteen days for sailing ships by the Nicaragua than by the Panama route—a loss of time that is of immense sig-nificance to ships of commerce and to our ships of war. We would be substantially excluded from all voice in a canal built by Costa Rica and Nicaragua with money borrowed from Europe, and our canal at Panama would be more than 400 miles farther from the United States than the Nicaragua route. The competition of two canals, one built with European and Asiatic money and the other owned by the United States, would soon lead to antagonism, and finally result in hostilities.

The fact is that our Government ought to control both routes, for our country will yet in its great growth need two canals, and the first practical step looking to that end will be the building of the Nicaragua Canal. We have surveyed it at an immense expense, have measured every foot, and demonstrated its great advantages, and the proposition to turn over these surveys to foreign capitalists, and to give them the best route to enable them to reap the profits is the climax of financial folly.

After years of contention with Great Britain we have closed with honor the Clayton-Bulwer imbroglio, and shall we now enter upon new negotiations with France in order that we may become successors to a company whose frauds disgusted the world and came near dismembering France?

It is known that her courts direct a new canal company in the nature of a receiver of the old company, which has 300,000 French stockholders, who still own their stock in the present new company. How can these wronged and injured citizens of France be dealt with unless the United States has a treaty with France? Shall we pay them the $109,000,000 that they ask or some smaller sum that for purposes of delay they may pretend to offer in order to get the doubtful chance of constructing a canal that has already cost $250,000,000 and is not one-third completed? Then when we have done with France and the horde of swindlers who have brought shame upon a noble people we must turn our attention to Colombia, a country that does not know who is its President a year in succession, or indeed at any time, and negotiate with it over a bargain counter for canal rights and privi-leges? In that there is not one ray of hope. Now is the accepted time for the long-deferred work, and Nicaragua is the accepted route. [Applause.]

[Mr. MANN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, when a similar bill was before this House during the sessions of the last Congress I was constrained, much against my will, to cast my vote against it for two reasons; and I must say, in the light of later events, that I have no regret for the compulsion that was then up the compulsion to

The first reason was that as a member of the committee to which this House has intrusted the conduct of its foreign affairs I could not deliberately vote that our country should break a treaty, the most solemn document that can be enacted on this earth between nations, in the face of the declaration by our State Department that so long as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was in existence this country could not, without breach of faith, proceed to build a canal across the Isthmus.

The second reason was a simple business proposition. House had authorized a most admirable Commission, at expense, to look into the cost and the feasibility of the different routes that were proposed. Under that consideration I could not cast my vote in favor of the bill before that Commission had reported. Now, Mr. Chairman, the first obstacle has been removed, with all credit to our country, by the very handsome action of the British Government. The second condition is now before us. We have waited for the report of the Commission. placed in the hands of every member of this House.

I wish to say now, for fear my position on this question may be misunderstood, that if the judgment of this House does not see fit to carry out the views of some of the members, I pledge my vote to this bill; for the man does not sit in this House who is more impressed both with the feasibility and the necessity for the construction of a canal than I am, both for the benefit of our own commerce and that of other countries.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me curious that such different conclusions should be reached by those who read the report of this Commission. Some are impressed with the idea that the whole report is to be read and interpreted on the condition that we can not buy the Panama Canal. I am one of those who take that view: for, bearing that proposition in mind, I think any man who will read that report carefully will come to the conclusion that the Commission advocate the Panama route. First, it is many miles shorter; second, it takes less time in transit; third, there are harbors already constructed at either end; fourth, it has a fewer number of locks through which ships must pass, and, fifth, and to my mind the most important of all, it can be maintained at an annual cost of $1,300,000 less than the Nicaragua Canal can be maintained. I have as yet heard no one capitalize that cost and add it to the expense of construction of the canal. My friends, a fixed charge of $1,300,000 annually, at 4 per cent interest, represents nearly $25,000,000 of capital, which you must add to the cost of the construction of the canal if it is to become a fixed charge on our people. And in my judgment the people will look at this question from an economical standpoint and will hold us responsible for the expenditure of their money.

I wish you to note that I take all my facts and statements from the Commission which this House authorized to report to us for and add it to the expense of construction of the canal.

the Commission which this House authorized to report to us for our information. I believe we should be largely guided by that Commission's report.

Of course, none of us is responsible for the bad management and the fearful losses of the Panama Canal Company. With that we have nothing to do, except to extend our sympathy to the unfortunate investors. The considerations which to my mind should tunate investors. The considerations which to my mind should control us here should be the benefit to the commerce of the world and the cost to the taxpayers of our country; and of these things, and of other facts which I will try to present to you, I shall have something to say.

The difference in the time of transit, according to the report of this Commission, is the difference between twelve hours by the Panama route and thirty-three hours by the Nicaragua route. We are told that the Nicaragua Canal is a day nearer to San We are told that the McCaragua Canal is a day heater to can Francisco. My friends, if it takes a day longer, or twenty-two hours longer, to go through the Nicaragua Canal, where is the saving? The time will be exactly the same, within two hours. We are told that it is so much nearer San Francisco, as if that was the only trade that is to pass through the canal. an advantage to be a day nearer to all the trade on the western South American coast? The whole trend of sentiment in our Country now is in the direction of the expansion of our trade.

I regret to see that many gentlemen here look only to the Orient. Let me tell you that there is a trade in South America which our country has entirely neglected, which is simply waiting for American enterprise, waiting for our commerce to come, and we must not lose sight of the fact that the Panama Canal is twenty-four hours nearer to all that vast field for American exploitation. That country is not inhabited by Chinamen whose prejudices we must break down, whose wants we must cultivate in order to build up our commerce, but it is inhabited to-day by civilized people who have civilized wants already, who are buying from other countries, and who do not buy from us because we have not sought their trade through proper channels or with proper energy.

The chairman of the committee held out an alluring bait that almost caught me in my earnestness for the building up of our merchant marine. He held out the vague hope that American ships might be allowed to pass through this canal without cost.

Why, Mr. Chairman, that would bring up a first principle of international law—that no government can levy a tax on the com-merce of the high seas; and this canal with its neutrality pre-served will occupy the same position as the high seas in relation to the commerce of other countries. And if perchance in our patriotism and our home policy we should undertake to maintain that for the rest of the world, the Panama Canal would be completed in the shortest possible time, for the combined wealth and ingenuity of Europe would be sent there, and united together for its countries. its completion. They would be obliged to do it in self-defense.

There are other reasons which I will advert to shortly, for it is getting late in the afternoon, and I do not wish to take up too much time. First, there is the question of the locks. Everyone who has any knowledge of canals knows of the difficulty of pass ing vessels through locks. You may theorize as to the time it will take. Everyone who has watched that slow operation and the hitches that take place even with the most improved mechanism knows that unforeseen delays will occur, and any delay in one lock of the canal will delay the vessels awaiting transit; and where there is a difference of eight locks against two in these canals you can see that it is a very important item. I am not an engineer, and on the question of curvature, which they have alluded to, I can only take what they say, that that element is entirely in favor of the Panama Canal.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will close with one suggestion. This Why? country found itself bound by the Bulwer-Clayton treaty. Why? Because it had been drawn as a compact between two nations, with all the honor of them at stake for its preservation. I may say that there was an unwritten compact with this Republic when it gave its tacit permission to the citizens of France to construct that canal across the Isthmus of Panama. That great and talented people had already constructed the Suez Canal successfully. Its usefulness had been demonstrated to the world by the benefit to its commerce. They then, with their great liberality and far-seeing philosophy, sought to further benefit the world by building a canal across the Isthmus of Panama. No executed contract was made, but I think no one will doubt that this country stood up and said, "Yes; you may go ahead." They did go ahead with the expenditure and loss of all their money, and yet we have no

But in the present condition, we having seen their hopeless condition, having seen their recklessness in their management, their agents having returned to France and submitted the question to the stockholders, and they now come forward in that straight, the stockholders, and they now come forward in that stockholders, and they now come forward in that stockholders, business-like way which we American people understand and are ready to negotiate; they offer to sell their canal, at what price? have allowed the agents of this House to appraise their property and to submit their proposition. Now, I ask if all in fairness we should not give these people a hearing? I believe as strongly and as enthusiastically as the chairman of the committee himself that a canal must be built, and of necessity; but I do say, what is to be gained by the little time, the few weeks of difference it would make in giving a hearing to these people, and to authorize the President, or, if you choose, the Commission, to give them the alternative of these two routes? I think it would be the part of sober action and of good judgment by this House.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ADAMS. If I can answer you any question I will do so, but I am afraid that I may not be able.

Mr. HEPBURN. If it is true that the very setting of a day to consider this proposition by the House of Representatives induced this company to reduce their demands for the canal from $109,000,000 to $40,000,000, does not the gentleman think it would be wise for us to take another step and pass this bill with the possibility that they would take off another ten million? [Laughter and applause.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not think so. I do not see very well, if we wish to treat our sister Republic and its people with any show of fairness, why we should expect anything of the kind. I think that the amount that they have proposed is a fair price on what is left of this unfortunate enterprise, and I do not think the great American people, who have just given such evidence of its fairness and forced the rest of the world to treat China equitably, would be willing to occupy any such position; and I will say to the gentleman that it is the people of our sister Republic who have made this loss, it is her people who helped to found this Republic, it is her people that have been our allies throughout the existence of our country; and I will quote our Chief Magistrate in his message to this Congress, when he said the foreign policy was to be the Monroe doctrine and the golden rule. He then announced a foreign policy that none can deny and all can support; and I say if we wish to occupy that position toward our sister Republic and the inhabitants of France, we of the United States must not press those unfortunate people to the wall.

It is the widowand the orphan that are meeting the loss; and if we can take the Panama Canal and complete it and run it more economically, I say it is the duty of this House of Representatives to hear what is to be said and to give them a chance and not push them to the wall. It was not the introduction of this bill that forced them to their present position. They knew this bill was coming. It had already passed the House of Representatives at the last Congress. They knew the sentiment of this House and they-knew it was going to prevail. The trouble was that their agents were in a most awkward position. They were sent out by the company and if they asked too much they knew they would the company, and if they asked too much they knew they would not get it, and if they asked too little they knew what would happen at home. What they anticipated has happened at home, and now under the new conditions their representatives are coming out to submit their proposition. I am informed by a gentleman on my left that they never asked one hundred and ninety millions; that they never asked anything, and so far as my own information goes they refused to make a definite proposition. They wanted to arbitrate and assess the value of their holdings; but of course if the chairman says that they did make that offer I do not question it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the canal is going to be built. The requirements of the world demand it. The American people have decided for its consummation in their political conventions. But I believe also that we should exercise our best judgment on this question. It is now purely a business proposition, and I think this House should go a little slow. A delay of a very few weeks would not be much when we are told that there is a difference of four years in the completion of the Panama Canal as against that of the Nicaraguan route.

Mr. MERCER. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. MERCER. Does the gentleman think that, providing Mr. MERCER. Does the gentleman think that, providing the House passes this bill to-morrow afternoon, the Senate of the United States will pass the bill the next day?

Mr. ADAMS. Not from my knowledge of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. MERCER. Then there is plenty of time for a legitimate proposition to reach the United States.

Mr. ADAMS. I have so much better opinion of the influence of this House upon the Senate that I can not take the position the gentleman proposes—that the action of this House, representing the people who raise the revenue, would have no influence whatever with the Senate of the United States. I am not prepared to pass this bill thinking that the action of this honorable House will carry no weight whatever in the Senate of the United States. States.

Mr. MERCER. If the House passes the bill as it stands, the gentleman thinks the Senate will undoubtedly take the bill up and pass it promptly?

Mr. ADAMS. I do not know. I am sorry to say that the Senate has not always followed the wise example set by the

Mr. MERCER. The gentleman ought not to criticise the Senate.

Mr. ADAMS. I am not criticising the Senate. Far be it from me to do so.

ne to do so. The gentleman asked a question and I answered it. Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, is it in order for me to offer an amendment to the bill at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not. General debate has not yet

Mr. MORRIS. Is it in order for me to give notice that to-morrow at the proper time I shall offer an amendment for the consideration of the members of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can ask unanimous consent to print his proposed amendment in the RECORD for the information of the committee.

Mr. MORRIS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to have printed in the RECORD an amendment which I propose to offer at the proper time, and which I now send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That if the Panama Canal, so far as constructed, and the property, rights, privileges, and franchises of all the corporations or persons interested therein can be acquired by the United States, free and clear of all incumbrances, for a sum not exceeding $40,000,000, and in addition thereto equally desirable political and territorial rights and privileges as in case of the Nicaraguan route, and at no greater expense, within six months from the passage of this act, then the President of the United States, if the Isthmian Canal Commission, or a majority thereof, shall so recommend, is hereby authorized to purchase the same, and to complete the construction of said Panama Canal, subject to all the conditions, provisions, and limitations aforesaid. And the sum of $50,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, toward the project herein contemplated.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota that his proposed amendment may be printed in the RECORD for the information of the committee?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GROSVENOR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House bill 3110 and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. Mahon for four days, on account of sickness in family.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Without objection, change of reference was made as follows: House bill 7212, to provide for the leasing for grazing purposes the vacant public domain, reserving all rights of homestead and mineral entry, the rentals to be a special fund for irrigation—from the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock

SENATE.

Wednesday, January 8, 1902.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m.
Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.
The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. RAWLINS, and by unanimous onsent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal, without objection, will stand approved.

SPANISH TREATY CLAIMS COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 7th instant, copies of the briefs and notes of counsel in possession of the Commission submitted upon the question of the right of the Commission to authorize the taking of depositions outside the limits of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7471) to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for transcripts of records and plats in the General Land Office was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

(Sundry messages in writing were received from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.)

USELESS PAPERS IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I discover in the record of yesterday's proceedings that under the heading of "Useless papers in the Executive Departments," "the President pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Civil Service Commission requesting, in accordance with the act of February 16, 1889, that authority be given the Commission to destroy all useless papers in their possession; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Printing and ordered to be printed."

Under the law the President of the Senate must appoint two Senators, to whom, with two members of the House, all such communications shall be referred. If there are any other com-munications received in regard to the destruction of useless papers they ought to go to a committee to be composed of two members of the Senate and two members of the House, and if they report that the papers are no longer valuable for present use or for historical purposes, then the Department can destroy them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That appointment must be made at each Congress?

Mr. COCKRELL. It ought to be made at each Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. For each individual case?

Mr. COCKRELL. All such communications can be referred to the same committee—a committee on the part of the Senate composed of two Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was under the impression that the communication which was referred yesterday related to papers in the Government Printing Office, and for that reason the Chair referred it to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; it was a communication from the Civil Service Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will appoint, then, as members of that committee on the part of the Senate, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Cockrell] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose]. If there be no objection, the reference of the communication yesterday will be reconsidered, and it will be referred to that committee.

CHARGES ON AMERICAN PRODUCTS IN LONDON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate:

In response to the Senate resolution of December 16, 1901, requesting the President, "if not incompatible with the public interest, to send to the Senate, at the earliest practicable time, a copy of the report made by Ambassador Hon. Joseph H. Choate to the State Department on October 9, 1901, relative to certain charges imposed by the London dock companies upon American flour and other American products shipped to that port," I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying paper.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, Washington, January 7, 1903.

LYNCHING AT TALLULAH, LA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, in connection with the President's message of January 29, 1901, relating to the lynching of certain Italian subjects at Tallulah, La., a report from the Secretary of State relating to the claim of Giuseppe Defina, an Italian subject, for damages to the amount of $5,000, on account of his having been forced by threats and menaces to abandon his home and business at Millikens Bend, La.

This claim was transmitted to the Fifty-sixth Congress at its second session, but no action appears to have been taken thereon.

IMPROVEMENT OF SKIDAWAY NARROWS, GEORGIA.

Mr. CLAY. I present a letter addressed to me by Col. J. H. Estill, of Savannah, Ga., with accompanying papers, relative to the improvement of Skidaway Narrows, in that State. I ask that the letter and accompanying papers be printed in the RECORD, omitting the names, and that they be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the letter and accompanying papers were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE MORNING NEWS, Savannah, Ga., January 6, 1902.

Hon. A. S. Clay, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Hon. A. S. Clay,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir: Traders, lumber, mill, and turpentine men, and fishermen and oystermen have been trying for several years to have Skidaway Narrows improved, and Congressman R. E. Lester had a resolution passed in Congress instructing the Engineer Department to submit estimates as to the cost of the work.

Skidaway Narrows is a creek connecting the waters of the Savannah River via Augustine Creek, Wilmington, and Skidaway rivers, with the Ogeechee River and other waterways to the southward. You may recognize Wilmington River as that upon which Thunderbolt is situated, and Skidaway River that upon which the suburban resort known as Isle of Hope is located; in fact, Skidaway Narrows is a continuation of Skidaway River. So important was this route in colonial times that a fort, the ruins of which are still to be seen, was erected at Isle of Hope to protect the colonists at Savannah and the people of South Carolina from the forays of the Spaniards and their Indian allies.

During the Confederate war the Narrows were obstructed to keep Union war vessels from getting in the rear of Savannah, and since then the water course has been almost unnavigable, except at high tides.

A year since Captain Gillette, United States Corps of Engineers, addressed letters to a number of citizens, among them myself, asking our views concerning the improvement of the Narrows, and a meeting of those addressed was held and I was made chairman. After considerable labor we gathered all the facts obtainable (see copy of report of Dr. L. A. Falligant, inclosed herewith) and forwarded them to Captain Gillette.

Now the purpose of my letter is to ask you to help get an appropriation for deepening Skidaway Narrows. There are three other routes that might be improved, viz, Parson's Cut (on which the United States Government, through private manipulations, spent $20,000 on all which was never used except by steamers going to Mr. Parson's island, Warsaw, and which is now almost useless), Romne the summer, whereas the other routes are through uninhabitable marshes. Furthermore, where one steamer passes through the other passages, though they have to wait for high water, a hundred sailing vessels use Skidaway Narrows, and if the latter should be deepened, steamers and tugs would use it as well as small trading vessels. It has the advantage of doing the most good for the greatest number.

Mr. LESTER, as I have stated, has been looking after this business, and he knows that I am writing to you to ask your help. I wish you would see him. He can explain the present status of affairs.

With my best wishes for you and yours during the year upon which we have just entered, I am,

Very truly, yours,

J. H. ESTILL.

Very truly, yours,

Committee of Meeting Called to Consider

Capt. C. E. Gillette's Letter of Inquiry, Savannah, Ga.

Dear Sir: Having been appointed by you chairman of the subordinate committee to ascertain as far as possible existing facts bearing upon the importance of widening and deepening Skidaway Narrows for the benefit of local commerce between Savannah and the localities between Savannah and the Ogeechee River which are most naturally interested therein, I inclose herewith certain papers which have come into my possession in response to a circular letter addressed by me (marked Exhibit A) and sent to a large number of parties who could give me all the information likely to be obtained from the owners and masters of vessels concerned in local coastwise commerce. You will also find in the inclosed letter or package a considerable list of names of petitioners, signed in pencil, and which for convenient examination I have copied in ink.

Two important revelations appear to be developed by these facts—one of which is that the route of travel is shorter in time, shorter in distance, and in every way safer than the lower route by way of Romney Marsh, and would on practically all occasions be used by boatmen if it was wide enough and deep enough in its progress through Skidaway Narrows. One reason for this preference is that it is farther away from ocean gales, and another reason is that there are but four rises and falls of the tide between Hellgate and Savannah, as follows: From Hellgate to highwater in the Narrows on a flood tide; from the Narrows by Isle of Hope to Wilmington River on the ebb tide from Helvakon Point to St. Augustine Creek Bridge, and possibly to Savannah on the next flood tide, if the wind is favorable, all of which would only constitute two flood tides and one ebb tide between Hellgate and Savannah, on the next flood tide, and the substitute of the mouth of the cut through Romney Marsh; fourth, a flood tide throug

We, the oystermen and fishermen who navigate the rivers between Savannah and Florida, heartily indorse the project of opening Skidaway Narrows to a sufficient width and depth for the easy passage of vessels at all times and tides, this route being the shortest, quickest, safest, and most convenient for us to travel in preference to all other routes between Hellgate, on the Big Ogeechee River, and Savannah, and we earnestly entreat our Representatives and Senators in Congress to use their best endeavors to secure the accomplishment of this much-needed improvement in our water route, not only for our own use and benefit, but also for that of our local commerce in general.

IRRIGATION INVESTIGATIONS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. Perkins] on the 16th ultimo, to report it with amendments, and I ask for its present consideration. The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments of the Committee on Printing were, in line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" and in line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That there be printed 3,200 additional copies of the bulletin entitled "Irrigation Investigations in California, Bulletin No. 100, United States Department of Agriculture, Office of Experiment Stations, 1001," of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Department of Agriculture and 200 copies for the use of the Senate.

The amendments were agreed to.
The resolution as amended was agreed to.

REPORT OF LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution, submitted by Mr. Wetmore on the 7th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 5,500 copies of the report of the Librarian of Congress for 1901; 500 copies for the use of the Senate, 1,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,500 copies for the use of the Library of

LAWS OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Mr. Flat I of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker] on the 7th instant, providing for printing the report of the Commission to Revise and Compile the Laws of Porto Rico, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate by presentations consent presented to consider the

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Concurrent resolution, as Ioliows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,500 copies of the report of the Commission to Revise and Compile the Laws of Porto Rico, sent to Congress by the Attorney-General, of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Department of Justice, 500 for the use of the Senate, and 1,500 for the use of the House of Representatives: Provided, That of the 1,500 copies for the use of the Department of Justice 1,000 shall be held by said Department for distribution in such a manner as the Commission to Revise and Compile the Laws of Porto Rico may indicate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I observe in this resolution and in the one which was passed a moment ago, to which I did not call attention, that the usual distribution of the number of copies as between the Senate and the House is varied. In the former resolution there were 1,500 copies given to the House and 500 to the Senate, and the same distribution is proposed by the pending resolution. Unless there is some special reason for it, the rule should be observed that the Senate shall have half as many copies as the House, in other words, one-third, and that in a publication of 1,500 copies the Senate shall have 500 and the House 1,000. I do not know of any special reason why the rule should be departed from in this any special reason why the rine should be departed from in this case. I do not know that it is important at all.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I have no objection to an amendment such as the Senator from Missouri suggests.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator think it is important that the House should have a larger proportion of copies of this publication than is usually given?

lication than is usually given?

Mr. PLATT of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to it in this case, but I do not want to have it understood that in ordinary publications there is to be a departure from the rule we have observed heretofore.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I will look out for it in the future.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

LEASES OF MINERAL LANDS BY INDIANS.

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes, sir; in order that they may be considered in connection with the resolution.

Be it resolved by the Senate, That the Committee on Indian Affairs is hereby instructed to make inquiry into and report to the Senate upon the following matters:

First. What, if any, title the Indians have to the valuable minerals within their reservations; and what, if any, authority they have to make leases thereof, or in any manner dispose of the same; and what authority, if any, the Secretary of the Interior has to approve such leases.

Second. What leases, if any, have been made by Indians within any reservation; and what, if any, such leases have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior; and what, if any, such leases are now in contemplation or under consideration for approval or disapproval.

Third. What methods have been employed to obtain the consent of the Indians to such leases; where have been organized and combinations formed to obtain such leases; where have the organizations taken place; who are the stockholders and officers thereof; and whether any persons connected with Congress or the Government of the United States, or holding offices thereunder, have been or now are interested in or engaged in the promotion of such companies or combinations in obtaining leases for mineral lands within Indian reservations.

And said committee is authorized, for the purpose of making a full investigation of the foregoing matters, to send for papers and to summon and examine witnesses, and the expense of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, Washington, November 21, 1898.

The Assistant Commissioner.

The Assistant Commissioner.

My Dear Jin: Please pardon my long silence, but you know Miller and I have been so fearfully busy (?) since arriving that we have done nothing. I got your letters. Was quite surprised when I learned that they had ordered the delegation here. At first I feared it would hurt us, and had they caught me in time, as they tried to, I should have advised against it. However, it was too late and we made the best of it, and it may come out all right.

They are here and are being nicely taken care of. They will see the Secretary to-morrow, and will insist upon it that they desire to lease their lands, and wish the Commissioner to send them a good man to get the lease. We have not been able to do anything definite so far. We are, however, getting things in apparently good shape for action as soon as we can. The Secretary has been away so much that our commission has not even had a chance to confer with him. The outlook is that soon after the Indian conference to morrow the Secretary will conclude to grant a permit to some one to go ahead and get a lease; then we hope to get our work in and have him approve the lease in advance, and then go on and get ahead of the others so that there can be no fault found by those being shut out. The Indians will also ask that the Hathenbruck lease be killed forever. Everybody interested is thoroughly aroused to the fact that our fight is worth making, and that victory or defeat is near at hand, so that I do not think any bet will be overlooked.

I wish you were here (Miller says he wishes so more so), but in view of this delay I presume it is just as well that you did not take the time to join us. Should matters so shape themselves that we need your immediate assistance will wire you. Senator RAWLINS has wired the Secretary to not sign the elaterite lease, and protests against granting any lease. I am just informed that the Secretary will approve the lease to morrow. I am glad of that, because it is a strong pull for another lease, and, I hope, ours.

Secretary Mekklejohn has been away, and as he is the one I desire to take your store matter up with, I have not been able to do anything. Will not overlook it, however. General Heath's absence is the cause of my not taking up the post-office matter. Will follow that also.

Miller sends love; I do the same.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 8, 1899.

Mr. S. M. Miller,

Denver, Colo.

Dear Miller: Since last writing you we have had another visit from Judge Thoman, who, together with his associates, made every effort to force us to agree to a combine with the same organization referred to in our last, viz, the Western, or Chicago and Milwaukee, and the Eastern, or New York organizations. He went to New Jersey and incorporated a company for $3,000,000, then proposed that a division be made as follows: Five per cent to be used by him in such a way as he may deem best; 35 per cent to remain in the treasury for future use, and the balance, or 60 per cent, to be divided equally among the three organizations—20 per cent each. It was the unanimous opinion of our friends that we ought not to consider this for a moment, believing as we do that we have far better chances than any or all of the others at the other end of the line, and equally or better chance here to win out independent of other interests.

If, during your negotiations with the Indians, there appears to you to be great danger for us and there is a prospect that we can not obtain any lease at once unless we combine with some one else, then advise us at once by telegraph, telling us where the danger lies. We are going to act upon a suggestion made us to day by one whose suggestions in such a matter are entitled to great respect, not to wait for any permit, but to go right straight ahead and use all our efforts at once to secure a lease. Several applications have been made for permits to go to the reservation to secure a mineral lease.

All the applications now on file will be held up for the present and no permits will be issued. I will write a letter to Myton telling him that you are coming and that at the suggestion of the proper authority no permit is necessary.

Were permits issued to all who have applied you would probably find sevmits will be issued. I will write a letter to Myton telling him that you are coming and that at the suggestion of the proper authority no permit is necessary.

Were permits issued to all who have applied you would probably find several persons on the ground with you trying to get the lease.

In that event you would have to proceed boldly but cautiously, and keep a close watch on what the others are doing.

Timms is working from here through Dr. McDonald, the veterinary surgeon at the post. But you need not fear the Doctor, as he will very soon be out of the way. It may be advisable to "lay low" until he gets his orders to leave and had gone away.

We have little fear that he can do us no damage, but he must be watched, and, if he leaves within a few days, as now seems likely, it would be advisable to wait until he is out of the way.

Thoman is the only man we think needs careful looking after.

He, or the Raven Mining Company, has just paid in $1,000 for the Indians on the elaterite lease. This money has not been earned, but has been paid in as a bluff to catch the Indians so as to get from them a new lease. Thoman has also been trying to get Myton off the reservation so as to get a chance to treat with him and get him away from us if possible. They are desperate, and will go to any length to detach Myton from his fidelity tous. However, Myton is fully aware of their intentions and will not be misled by any proposition they may make to him, realizing that our interests are mutual in every particular.

As it looks now, however, I am very hopeful that you can get on the ground and go to work with the Indians without any interference from the other parties.

After the first council the Indians hold to consider the matter there will be probably an adjournment of a week or two before they take any final action.

When that first council adjourns you can probably tell how the land lies. If you think it advisable or necessary for us to combine with some other inter-

when that first council adjourns you can probably tell how the land lies. If you think it advisable or necessary for us to combine with some other interests, wire me at once. If you then need help in the matter, will send somebody out at once. * * * * We inclose herewith blank forms for lease to be used with the necessary acknowledgments and affidavits and certificates at the end. See that all the formulas are carefully and accurately followed.

We think that it is very important that you should start at once and push the thing through as rapidly as possible. We will have a great advantage in being on the ground first, and we hope there will be no one to interfere with you.

Keep me advised in the matter as fully as possible.

Very truly, yours,

I will send a copy of this to Myton, Mease & McAndrews, so that they will be advised at once of the situation and be prepared to act as soon as you

Washington, D. C., March 13, 1899.

My Dear Jim: I am informed that Timms, the man who claims to have a sure hold on the lease if he can secure a permit to go on the reservation, left here last night ostensibly to go west to look after some other business, but I am quite sure that he expects to make a dive for the agency. He has been working through Dr. McDonald, and we concluded it best to have the Doctor given "a change of base" for his health. I wrote to Myton to wire me when Myton goes. This man Timms has the prior claim for the right to go on the reservation, as his application has been in for a year or two, hence it is embarrassing to the Department to turn him down if he is a responsible party. However, it may be necessary for a permit to be given him first. In that case it will be necessary for us to "knock" him until he is out of the way, hence demonstrating that he can not get the lease. At the same time I am a little afraid of that, and prefer that Miller and you boys go ahead independent of permit and try and get loose, provided you think that best. You are on the ground and know best. If I find the Department gives Timms a permit, I will try and have them grant the same to all applicants.

In that case we will have to fight it out and take our chance. Saturday I will be appointed special allotting agent. From now on I will have nothing to do with the lease matter—publicly (?). However, it may be found essential (?) that I should accompany Mr. Graves to the reservation to assist in determining which of the proposed ditches will be best for the dear Indians. Do you suppose I can judge that matter correctly?

As I understand the matter, nothing further can be done until Mr. Graves makes his report. Then the Secretary will grant the permit as he deems best. I do not know how soon Mr. Graves will go out there, but I presume it will be a month or six weeks before he gets there. In the meantime have the proper papers duly filed with the Land Department and as I wrote you in my last.

Am just in receipt of the following wire from Judge Thoman, Chicago:
"I carry a very important private letter to you. Can you meet in New York Wednesday? Answer quick." My reply will be that I can not meet him there.
If important, come here. I am not running after the bluffer.
Sincerely,
HARPER.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I desire to make a suggestion. I suggest that the letters which are being read be printed in the RECORD. Would not that answer the purpose of the Sen-in the Record. Would not that answer the purpose of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. RAWLINS. The Secretary is about through with the reading. I suggest that he complete it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have no objection to consuming the time of the Senate in this way, except that it is a rather unnecession.

Mr. RAWLINS. The Secretary is nearly through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will continue the reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will continue the reading.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, March 14, 1899.

My Dear Mease Fearing something may turn up unexpectedly with Miller, I address this to you.

I know you will conclude that we are wild at this end, the way we are changing our orders and suggestions. That is owing to the fact that matters are changing very rapidly here. To-morrow I will have Colonel McKay wire and the leaf of the man will have colonel McKay wire and the leaf of the mean will have colonel McKay wire and the necessity for me to wing to the way matters have changed here, and the necessity for me to be kept out of this, I have concluded that it will be best for all wires between you and I. or Miller and I, should be addressed to N. McKay, 1008 Thirteenth street NW., and all wires sent from here be signed by him—even the cipher ones. This will preclude the possibility of it leaking out there that I am associated in the matter. The reason will more clearly develog in the future, I think.

The Timms people have been plugging fearfully hard for the last day or so the property of the last day or so the property of the last day or so the property of the last stay or through Curtis of Kansas, they have undoubtedly secured the assistance, to a degree at least, of Assistant Secretary Ryan—a very important factor. Ryan has been fighting against any lease; but now thinks that one should be granted, but insists that the Timms people be allowed the first chance of them. Under these circumstances we can see that should we proceed as planned and obtain the lease without consent he will head us off at this end, while if the Timms crowd have their chance fresh and fail then they can have no inflatent the control of the control of the chance fresh and fail then they can have no inflatent the control of the control of the chance fresh and fail then they can have no inflatent the control of the contro

Be sure and have a good conference over all these matters with Myton and McAndrews, so that no move is made without the clear understanding of all. HARPER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 25, 1899,

MYTON, MEASE, MCANDREWS & MILLER

MY DEAR FRIENDS: I send a copy of the following to each of you: It was decided to-day that it will be best for me not to go to the reservation until after Timms has been there and gone. It is feared that should I go now, as contemplated, it might give grounds for the claims that I was there to influence against favorable action upon Timms's request, and I can not afford to place [me] or my friends in such a position.

The whole situation must rest with you boys, and if you can not prevent Timms or any other party from securing the lease then our plans fall through. As a final statement of our understanding of the whole matter to-day, I will say:

First, it looks now as though a permit will be granted to Timms the fore part of the week, and he be given thirty days in which to go upon the reservation to attempt to secure the lease. His priority of application precludes our heading him off.

Mr. Myton will undoubtedly be instructed to call the necessary council for the purpose. The sooner that can be done the sooner will the chance come to others to act.

Second. It will devolve upon you boys to see to it that he is not successful. It will no doubt be a difficult task, but it must be done so as not to arouse any suspicions.

It will no doubt be a difficult task, but it must be done so as not to access, suspicions.

Third. After Timms gets through, if unsuccessful, then our chance will come. Then you must plan to surely win.

Fourth. In the meantime do not let any word from any or all other sources mislead you to the belief that they have or can secure any advantage at this end of the line, or that we have agreed or will agree to any combination whatever. We have by far the strongest organization here and will so continue it, and we have not made (nor will we make) any combinations, simply because we can see no possible reason why we should not hold out and push the whole matter through alone.

Finally. Listen to nothing from Thoman or Timms or any of their gang or any other interests. We depend upon you each and all to stand or fall together. With such concerted action we will finally win.

Sincerely, yours,

gether. With such Sincerely, yours,

E. R. HARPER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER subsequently said: Mr. President, I notice that the resolution presented by the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], and in connection with which certain documents were read, was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. It appears to me, inasmuch as the resolution contemplates a very important inquiry, that it ought first to go to the Committee on Indian Affairs for that committee to determine the advisability of making such inquiry.

I will state that when matters of that kind come to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, that committee has authority only to determine whether or not there is money enough in the contingent fund to pay for the inquiry, and when a favorable report comes from that committee the resolution ordinarily is adopted and the inquiry is provided for.

The matter has been up before, and I think it has been the sense of the Senate that in all important matters of this kind the standing committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter ought first to report to the Senate that in its judgment it is advisable to make the inquiry. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, it seems to me that while or-Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, it seems to me that while ordinarily that might be a necessary and proper procedure, yet in this case it must be manifest to the Senate that an investigation should be made. I have conferred with the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I do not believe there is any doubt about the propriety of the investigation. Of course, I do not care what course the resolution takes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If the Senator from Utah will allow an interruption, I will state that I regard this as a matter affecting the regular procedure of the Senate. I think at the affecting the regular procedure of the Senate. I think at the last session of the Senate it was the sense of this body, after some discussion, that resolutions proposing investigations should be referred to the committee having jurisdiction of the subject before they were referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

In this particular instance it may not be important, but it is important as a rule of procedure. The Senate can scarcely judge, upon a resolution presented, whether there ought to be an inves-The committee having jurisdiction of the subject can look into it and say whether there ought to be an investigation; and I think that is the better way. I hope the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, of which the Senator from Utah is himself a member, and to which he can give all the information it may need.

Mr. RAWLINS. I have no objection to that course, if it is

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the reference of the resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate will be reconsidered; and the question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire, to refer the resolution to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill (S. 1143) granting an increase of pension to Charles L. Sweatt was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Charles L. Sweatt, late of Company F, Twelfth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

POLICY OF PENSION COMMITTEE.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I understood the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger], chairman of the Committee on Pensions, these bills which were reported and are now on the Calendar are copies of bills which were reported favorably at the last Congress and passed by the Senate and not acted upon in the

Mr. GALLINGER. A portion of them were, I will say to the Senator from Missouri, but some of them were not. Some of them are original bills. I stated that a proportion of them had passed the Senate heretofore, but not all. All of these bills had careful consideration in the committee yesterday morning, and were reported in accordance with a vote of the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. I recognized a number of them as bills which were research but he Seator to the last received.

which were passed by the Senate at the last session, and I wanted to know whether they were all of that kind.

Mr. GALLINGER. A considerable number of them are, but not all.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is the bill for the relief of Daniel C. Knowles one of them?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; it is an original bill, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I think in these matters of increases of pension there ought to be at least some assurance to the Senate that the committee has had some evidence of particular reasons why they should be increased. I suppose that the general law with reference to pensions endeavors to grade the pensions according to the deserts of certain classes, and where exceptions are made there certainly ought to be some special reason.

It is a very delicate matter for some of us to have anything to say on the subject of pensions, and I do not think I have ever had anything to say on it heretofore. Wherever, in the opinion of the committee, pensions should be granted, I am disposed to rely upon committee, pensions should be granted, I am disposed to rely upon the judgment of the committee and say nothing; but where it is proposed to take a particular pensioner out of the class to which he belongs and to give him a pension not allowed to others of the same class, I think there certainly ought to be some good reason for it.

I have every confidence in the committee and in the distinguished chairman of the committee, and believe that every effort is being made to prevent undue preferences or favoritism in any regard; but I do think that where a large number of bills pro-posing to give increased pensions are submitted to the Senate, we ought to have at least an assurance from the Senator from New Hampshire, the distinguished chairman of the committee, that in each case there is some special reason which takes that particular case out of the class to which it belongs.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will permit me, he is entirely right in his suggestion and contention. The committee is endeavoring as best it can to accomplish the very result that the Senator has in mind.

Mr. President, as an illustration I will cite the first bill that was passed. Daniel C. Knowles, then a young man, was a teacher in the Pennington Academy, in New Jersey, when the war broke out. He left his profession and recruited in New Jersey a company of college boys. They went to the war, and almost every one of them was either killed or wounded in one of the great battles of the war.

Mr. Knowles, in consequence of exposures in the Southern swamps, was attacked by fever and ague, and for a long time was on the point of death. However, he recovered sufficiently to get to his home, but was compelled to resign his service in the Army.

He afterwards became a distinguished minister of the Methodist denomination, and was at one time at the head of the New Hamp-shire Conference Seminary, in Tilton, N. H., but he has been an invalid in consequence of his Army exposures from the time of his resignation from the Army.

He struggled on as well as he could. He received a pension, although he did not apply for it until he was compelled to do so by circumstances. He might have been pensioned the very day he left the Army, but he did not, I think, apply for a pension until 1880, and he is receiving a pension of $20 a month under the general law.

A few years ago a disease of the bones of the foot developed. He consulted very eminent surgeons in the city of Boston, and had his foot amputated. The surgeon who amputated his foot, well known to me personally as one of the most distinguished surgeons in New England, has given it as his unqualified opinion that the disease of the foot was due to the poisoned condition of the system and was directly related to his military service. Three other eminent surgeons have concurred in that opinion.

But the Bureau of Pensions, in its wisdom, presided over, as the medical department is, by a very technical physician as medical referee—a man who, I have been informed, never practiced general medicine, but was a specialist before he was appointed to that place—rejected the claim, saying the proof was not sufficient that the loss of the foot was due to military service. He set himself up as possessing a more accurate knowledge of the case than the surgeon who performed the amputation and the other physicians who had treated the soldier from the time he left the service.

The Committee on Pensions has given great care to this case, as it does to every case, and it unanimously concluded to over-rule the Bureau of Pensions and grant the increase, the equities being so strong and the probabilities so great that the amputation was the result of disease contracted in the service, which poisoned the system and has continued to poison the system ever since, that the committee felt justified in doing so.

I will say furthermore to the Senator, that if the Bureau of Pensions had accepted the evidence of the surgeons who treated this man and who amputated his foot-distinguished surgeons as they are-Mr. Knowles would have received a pension considerain excess of $40 a month through the regular channel.

Mr. President, it is a difficult task which we have to perform as a committee. We want to do justice to every soldier, and we do not want to do injustice to any soldier or to the Government, and I think every case which the committee reports will bear the closest scrutiny. We make written reports in every case. We may err in judgment, of course, but we are trying to do justice along the line and not do violence to either the interests of the men who served the Government in the field or to the Government itself.

I trust that the Senator from Georgia will examine our reports with care, and I feel sure he will find that we are, at least, honestly endeavoring to do what is right.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the Senator from New Hampshire read the rules of the committee. Here is a copy.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state that for the purpose of trying to relieve the committee from the tremendous work that is imposed upon it, a work requiring more hours of labor than any Senator not connected with the committee has the least comprehension of, I came to Washington during the recess and spent several days here in consultation with officials of the Bureau of Pensions and others, and worked conscientiously in an endeavor to prepare a code of rules that would exclude from consideration here all cases that were not of merit and which would simply impose upon the committee the consideration of cases that had at least a considerable degree of merit in them. As a result of that the committee has prepared a code of rules. Every Senator will the committee has prepared a code of rules. Every Senator will in a day or two be supplied with a number of copies of the code, which I think to a large extent will eliminate from consideration bills that ought not to come here, and which, if presented, ought not to receive favorable treatment at the hands of the committee.

In the first place I called attention in a note to the fact—and I think I will read that note—

Mr. COCKRELL. Read the whole thing.
Mr. GALLINGER. Well, I will read the whole thing:

RULES.

Note.—The Pension Committees of the two Houses of Congress were created to consider a limited number of claims, some of which were necessarily rejected by the Bureau of Pensions for the reason that they were not covered by any existing law, while others were rejected upon legal or medical technicalities which Congress could properly set aside as a matter of equity and justice. It was not the intention to have Congress flooded with pension bills, but simply to afford a means of relief in cases of exceptional merit. Unfortunately, the primary and essential purpose of these committees has been lost sight of, and there seems to be a prevalent opinion that it is proper to bring every rejected claim, either for original pension or increase, to the attention of Congress, and in many instances the Bureau of Pensions is being entirely ignored. For the purpose of endeavoring to prevent the introduction of bills which can not be favorably considered, and to enable the committee to give attention to bills which are worthy of consideration, the following code of rules has been adopted for the information of the Senate and the guidance of the committee:

Rule 1. To secure the introduction in the Senate of a bill for pension, or increase of pension, a carefully prepared petition should be addressed "To the Congress of the United States," setting forth the applicant's post-office address, his age, and the proper designation of the military organization to which he belonged, or the names of all naval vessels on which he served, and the length of service; whether application for pension has been made to the Bureau of Pensions, and if so the action taken thereon; and if no such application has been made the reasons therefor; the nature and degree of all disabilities, whether mental or physical, showing specifically those claimed to have been contracted in the service and in the line of duty; and if application was made under the act of June 27, 1890, stating all existing disabilities not due to vicious habits, and the extent to which they disable him from the performance of manual labor; also the character and value of all property owned by him, and net annual income from all sources. The facts enumerated in said petition should be supported by claimant's sworn statement, and the petition and affidavit should be transmitted to one of the Senators representing the State in which the applicant resides.

Rule 2. No bill will be considered by this committee unless application for pension or increase of pension has first been made to the Bureau of Pensions, nor while the claim is pending in the Bureau, except in cases where conclusive proof is presented that the claimant has no pensionable status under existing laws.

Rule 3. Where original pension or increase of pension has been allowed by special act no proposition for additional pension will be entertained.

Bulle 4. In no case will allowance of arrears be recommended, nor will application for increase of pension sons or daughters of soldiers will not be entertained except in cases where it is shown by satisf nentry neppless from a period antecasting and a case of destitution. In such cases the rate allowed shall not exceed $12 per month.

RULE 6. Bills for increasing pensions which have been granted by the Bureau under the act of June 27, 1890, at less than $12 per month will not be given consideration. The soldier must establish his fittle to and be granted the maximum rate provided by said act before applying to Congress. If it be shown that a claimant who is in receipt of pension at the maximum rate under that law is in absolutely destitute circumstances or suffering from a permanent disability of an extreme nature, a bill proposing to grant additional pension may be favorably considered, and if a rejected claim exists under the general law, the equities in the latter claim will receive consideration in connection with the bill.

Bule 7. Where pension has been allowed at the rate of $3 per month under the law of 1887, granting service pensions to soldiers and widows of soldiers of the Mexican war, no proposition for increase will be entertained until after application has been made to the Pension Bureau and action taken thereon under the amended Mexican pension law granting $12 per month to such as are wholly disabled for manual labor and in destitute circumstances.

Rule 8. Bills proposing to pension men who were not mustered into the military service, except in cases where in emergencies they performed military duty and were wounded, or unless some special or extraordinary service was rendered in connection with the Army, are not admissible.

Rule 9. The rating for pension or increase of pension to widows of officers will be graded according to rank, as indicated in the following statement.

Mr. President, by this rule we are going to get rid, so far as the

Mr. President, by this rule we are going to get rid, so far as the committee is concerned—the Senate can, of course, override the committee, if they so choose—but we are going to get rid of these large pensions to the widows of general officers, which, to my mind, have been questionable, to say the least, in some previous legislation.

For major-general and brigadier-general in the Army and commodore and rear-admiral in the Navy, not exceeding $50 per month.

That is to say, if the widow of a very distinguished officer is receiving $30 per month under the general law, is in destitute circumstances, and the service of the soldier has been exceptional in length or in important duty performed, the committee may, in its discretion, increase that pension to a sum not exceeding $50 per month. In many cases $100 and $150 has been given, and I think the committee now has a bill under consideration, or at least in its possession, whereby it is proposed to give a pension of $2,000 a year to the widow of an officer. Of course we will not report the bill in the form it came to the committee.

For colonel and lieutenant-colonel in the Army and Marine Corps, and captain, commander, and those officers of the Navy, such as surgeon, paymaster, chief engineer, ranking with commander by law, lieutenant commanding, and master commanding in the naval service, not exceeding $40 per month.

For major in the military service and Marine Corps, and lieutenant and such other surgeons, paymasters, and chief engineers who rank with lieutenant by law in the naval service, and passed assistant surgeons in the naval service, not exceeding $55 per month.

For captain in the Army and Marine Corps, chaplain in the Army, and provost-marshal, professor of mathematics, master and assistant surgeon, assistant paymaster, and chaplain in the naval service, not exceeding $30 per month.

For first and second lieutenants in the Army and Marine Corps, acting assistant or contract surgeon, and deputy provost-marshal, first assistant engineer, ensign, and pilot in the naval service, and enrolling officer, not exceeding $25 per month.

RULE 10. Consideration will not be given to any bill proposing to restore to the roll the name of a widow whose pension was forfeited by remarriage.

Attention is called to the fact that in the second session of the Fifty-sixth Congress a law was passed which gives that class of widows, where they are meriterious and where they are in destitute circumstances, an opportunity to go to the Bureau of Pensions, under certain conditions, and have their names restored to the roll, so that we will hereafter absolutely refuse to consider such claims. The law is as follows:

In order to afford relief to this class of widows Congress passed an act, which was approved March 3, 1901, amending section 4708 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to read as follows:

"The remarriage of any widow, dependent mother, or dependent sister entitled to pension shall not bar her right to such pension to the date of her remarriage, whether an application therefor was filed before or after such marriage; but on the remarriage of any widow, dependent mother, or dependent sister having a pension such pension shall cease: Provided, however, That any widow who was the lawful wife of any officer or enlisted man in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the period of his service in any war, and whose name was placed or shall hereafter be placed on the pension roll because of her husband's death as the result of wound or injury received or disease contracted in such military or naval service, and whose name has been or shall hereafter be dropped from said pension roll by reason of her marriage to another person who has since died or shall hereafter die or from whom she has been heretofore or shall be hereafter divorced upon her own application and without fault on her part, and if she is without means of support other than her daily labor, as defined by the acts of June 27, 1880, and May 9, 1900, shall be entitled to have her name again placed on the pension roll at the rate now provided for widows by the acts of July 14, 1882, March 3, 1873, and March 19, 1886, such pension to commence from the date of the filing of her application in the Pension Bureau after the approval of this act: And provided further. That where such widow is already in receipt of a pension from the United States she shall not be entitled to restoration under this act: And provided further, That where the pension of said widow on her second or subsequent marriage has accrued to a helpless or idiotic child or a child or children under the age of 16 years she shall not be entitled to restoration under this act unless said helpless or idiotic child or children under the age of 16 years she shall not be entitled to restoration under this act unless said helpless or idiotic child or children under the age of 16 years she shall not be entitled to restoration to said chi

RULE 12. Bills for original pension will ordinary be ence to those for increase.

RULE 13. Upon request of a Senator any bill will be promptly referred to a subcommittee, but the bill must be reported back to the full committee for consideration and action.

RULE 14. An authorized statement by a member of the committee, or by the Senator introducing a bill, as to the circumstances of the claimant, will be required when satisfactory evidence does not appear among the papers accompanying the bill. accompanying the bill.

JACOB H. GALLINGER, JOHN H. WALKER, Clerk.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Are these rules identical with those adopted by the House committee?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that they are practically so, and I will now divulge a secret in saying that the rules were prepared by the Senate committee, but were given to the press by the House committee, to which a copy of the rules had been sent as a matter of courtesy. Very likely it was an inadvertence by some one connected with that committee.

Mr. SPOONER. If there is any essential difference in the rules, will the Senator kindly indicate it?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is very slight. The House Committee on Pensions is a committee having jurisdiction only of bills relating to the old wars, not the civil war. There are two Pension Committees in that body—the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions. There is one rule relating to the act of 1890 which the Committee on Pensions of the House did not adopt, as they have nothing to do with pensions under that act, and they have inserted one or two immaterial matters which are not in this code. However, the rules are essentially the same, and my effort has been to get the two committees of the House to agree to uniform rules. Whether that is possible or not I am not prepared to say; but efforts will continue to be made in that direction, in the hope that we shall have a uniform code of rules for the three committees, and thus be able to perform our duties here without doing violence to the rights of any class of soldiers in the granting of very large pensions that the common soldiers have the right to complain about, as they do.

Mr. McCOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator whether it is not practicable and also very desirable that the rules of the two Houses in regard to pensions should be identical? A bill may pass one House and fail in the other if the rules are different. I know the chairman of the committee has a large experience and will agree that the rules of both Houses regarding pensions should be identical.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is right about that, and that is the very thing I am trying to accomplish; but we have no jurisdiction here over the action of the other body, so I can not make any rash promises.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose these rules are binding upon conference committees?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, sir; the conference committees are pretty careful about that.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I understand, the rules adopted by the House Committee on Pensions proper are precisely the same as those adopted by the Senate committee, excepting the part here which refers to invalid pensions. I think in their rule they have no provision in regard to cases under the law of June 27, 1890. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether in cases where increase of pension is sought the committee considers the two essentials that are placed here in these rules-

first being extreme disability for manual labor and the second destitution? Do you allow an increased pension to a person who has a reasonable support or an income sufficient for a reasonable support independent of the pension, or do you confine these increases to those who are both destitute and physically disabled for any manual labor and have no employment or capital that yields them any income?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say, in response to the Senator's inquiry, Mr. President, that that is precisely what we are aiming to do. We do not propose to grant increases of pension to either men or women who have an income outside of their pensions which will enable them to live in comfort, but we invariably require proof of comparative destitution at least.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to repeat what I said before—the entire confidence which I have in the Senate Committee on Pensions, and in the distinguished chairman who presides tee on Pensions, and in the distinguished chairman who presides over it. I think that the fact that the suggestion or inquiry made by me has brought forth the very satisfactory statement which has been made by the chairman of the committee is sufficient compensation for whatever time has been consumed by the interruption made by me.

It is a fact known to us all that pension cases are taken up generally under a special order or under a unanimous agreement, and that in large numbers bills are passed here without any pos-sibility of scrutiny on the part of Senators, and when circumstances make it absolutely necessary that we should rely implicitly upon the committee. Therefore, it is of the utmost value, not only to us, but to the country at large, that the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, the distinguished chairman of the committee, has been able to make a statement to the Senate and to the country which will satisfy us and the public of the fact that in the large amounts which are appropriated annually for the increase of pensions the committee and the Senate are not grant-increase of pensions the committee and the senate are not granting these increases as matters of favor, but are governed by rules, the propriety of which will be recognized by all.

Of course, Mr. President, as I said before, it is a delicate matter for some of us to have anything to say on the subject of pensions. Those of us who are so situated recognize the propriety of proper pensions and give our support most heartily, freely, and cheerfully to such pensions. I repeat, that it is a matter of gratulation that we have had this statement from the chairman of the committee, which will satisfy the Senate and the country that the committee, which will satisfy the Senate and the country that the utmost care is being taken by that committee, upon which, I repeat, we can rely in the passage of these bills, to see to it that pensions are only granted in meritorious cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether the Committee on Invalid Pensions in the House of Representatives has adopted similar rules?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, so far as I know, that committee never has had any rules, but it is perhaps proper that I should say that the clerk of the committee has come to our committee and is in possession of copies of our rules. I think that committee is going to give them consideration. Whether the committee is going to give them consideration. Whether the rules will be adopted by them or not, I can not say.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope they will adopt some rules, so that there will be something for the public guidance,

Mr. GALLINGER. I have earnestly urged that, and hope it

Mr. McCOMAS. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire, the chairman of the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am listening.

Mr. McCOMAS. I should like to know whether the rules proposed have enough flexibility to reach a case like that of Dr. Lazear? I think the chairman of the committee is familiar with the case of which I speak. Dr. Lazear and other physicians went to Cuba at the instance of the Government, and from love of science and love of country they submitted themselves to the perils of inoculation of yellow fever, certain physicians sleeping under coverlets and bedclothing of men who had had yellow fever, others submitting to the inoculation of mosquitoes which were infected with the virus of that fever. Dr. Lazear, especially, was zealous and submitted to unusual injections of the poison from mosquitoes. He incurred a severe case of yellow fever and dial. mosquitoes. He incurred a severe case of yellow fever and died. He went to Cuba at the instance of the Johns Hopkins University, through love of science and love of country, and there he lost his life, leaving a widow and family. He was never mustered into the service of the Army; he was a volunteer without being mustered in, and lost his life for country and science and for the safety of our soldiers. I desire to ask the distinguished chairman of the committee whether the rules have enough flexibility to admit, in the judgment of the Senate—if they should think that a physician who loved science and loved his country and thereby lost his life—the granting of a pension to the widow and children who survive him?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say, in response to the interrogatory of the Senator from Maryland, that if it can be shown that the service performed was in direct connection with the Army, we have a rule which distinctly covers it; but if it was not with that end in view, if it was simply to promote science or to determine whether or not men inoculated by mosquito bites in certain sections of the country or the world can survive, I do not think it would be a proper case for pension. If a bill in such a case should be introduced it would rather be, it occurs to me, in the nature of a claim than a pension. Congress might, recognizing the services which had been rendered to humanity and to the welfare of the people not only of Cuba, but of our own country, especially the Southern portion of it, very justly, it seems to me, do something for the dependents of that man who gave up his life in the pursuit of science.

Our rule is that men not mustered into the service, if they performed in emergencies military duty—and there have been a few such cases; as, for instance, where a teamster took the rifle of a fallen soldier, marched in the ranks, and fought and was wounded—and we have had a few cases of men who performed very distinguished service for the Army as scouts and spies, which saved the lives of soldiers and the property of the Government by the services they rendered. In these few exceptional cases we have recognized their right to consideration by Congress in the matter of pensions to themselves or their dependents.

I trust, Mr. President, I have made the position of the committee clear on this matter, and it will rather rest with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. McComas] or with the friends of Dr. Lazear to determine, before we can take jurisdiction of cases of that nature, whether or not this service was performed as a military matter or in connection with the welfare directly of the Army, or matter or in connection with the welfare directly of the Army, or whether it was purely in exploitation of a theory that very likely has led up to very important scientific results, although I am not myself very clear on that point.

Mr. McCOMAS. I want to say to the Senator that I think his classification includes a case like that of the physician I have named, who died just as bravely as any man fighting out on the picket line, in behalf of science incidentally, but directly for the safety of the Army in Cuba, where he lost his life. I shall urge the case, and I shall feel safe in the hands of the chairman of the committee, if our rules are elastic enough.

committee, if our rules are elastic enough.

Mr. COCKRELL. In regard to the relaxation of the rule, I understand that the rule 8 of the committee, which has been read, proposes that-

Bills proposing to pension men who were not mustered into the military service, except in cases where in emergencies they performed military duty and were wounded, or unless some special or extraordinary service was rendered in connection with the Army, are not admissible.

I hope the Committee on Pensions will stand firmly by that rule. Pensions are granted for military service, and not for civilian service. If a teamster or anyone else in the civil employment of the Government should get into an engagement, perform military duty, and in that engagement be wounded or disabled, he would be pensioned, not because of his civilian employment, but because of the military duty he was performing at the time. I trust we shall never depart from the rule of granting pensions only for military service.

I remember distinctly the first discussion that ever was had in this Senate over pensioning a teamster. We had discussions here time and time again, and in every solitary instance we beat the Committee on Pensions when they would report in favor of pensioning a teamster, until a case came before us where a team-ster had been wounded in battle. From that time on that has been recognized as the rule of the Senate, and I hope it will not be departed from.

Mr. McCOMAS. I will ask the Senator from Missouri if he does not think the case I have stated would be a proper case for granting a pension? Mr. COCKRELL. granting a pension?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not, and I say so very frankly. I do not think it comes within this rule at all. It is a case where Congres might think proper to afford relief, but not by way of pension. There is the distinction. The service was not necessarily connected with service in the Army. It was not military duty, fighting against an enemy, carrying forward the forces of the Army, or anything of that kind. I do not think it the kind of military duty for which pensions should be paid. We originally passed the law of July 14, 1862, granting pensions to soldiers who incurred disabilities, wounds, or diseases in the line of duty in the service. That law was the sole law for guidance in the issuance service. That law was the sole law for guidance in the issuance of pensions until the act of June 27, 1890, was passed. We then deviated from the requirement that the disabilities should have been contracted in the service, in the line of duty, and under the law of June 27, 1890, pensions were granted for all disabilities where they were contracted before or since the war, in or out of service, where they were not due to the vicious habits of the applicant. Those are the two laws by which we are governed now. Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, I do not desire to cause delay in the consideration of the pension cases now before the Senate, but I want to dissent from the views expressed by the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. Cockrell]. I believe in fixed rules, and I think it is time that the Senate and the House should establish fixed rules, so that Congress shall not be deemed an indiscriminate and capricious court of appeals to undo the work of the Pension Bureau; but I can not assent that the narrow limitations of the Senator from Missouri shall obtain. In the particular case which I have mentioned and shall urge upon the Senate, the man morally is just as worthy of a pension as others who served their country with like motives of bravery and consistency.

It has not been the rule—I respectfully dissent from the statement of the Senator—that a man must be mustered into the service of the country before he can be pensioned by his country. There are found in history and in the vaults of this Capitol cases of men who were Minute Men in the Revolution, and pension bills were passed for their relief. President Washington did not refuse to sign bills for their relief because they had not been mustered into the military service of the country. I recall now a case in respect to several soldiers of the war of 1812 who had been voted a pension by Congress. When the bill was sent to President Jackson, he did not ask whether they came within the rigid rule stated by the Senator from Missouri, but asked whether they had done this service to their country, and when he found they had, he did not veto, but signed the bill.

In my own observation and experience, I recall the case of another soldier, Joseph Romiser, of Cumberland, Md. He was a soldier, but had not been mustered into the service. He was shot through the head before he had been mustered in. When the President of the United States said that Congress should not have voted a pension to this man because he had not been mustered in, although he had been shot in the service of his country, Congress, in both Houses, by a large vote, passed the bill over the veto of the President. I contend in such a case a man has served his country just as much as if he had been mustered in as a soldier. So in the other case I have mentioned, the man who wards off an enemy or averts an attack upon the Army, as a pestilence of yellow fever, and does that to save the army in Cuba, is worthy of a paltry pension being granted to his widow and children of $30 a month. We have made that rule which George Washington a month. We have made that rule which George washington approved, and which Congress has approved over vetoes of the President, and I think Congress will again in such a just case approve of a pension under such circumstances.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senate to Rule VIII, which only permits a Senator to speak and not over five minutes, without the consent of the Senates.

once, and not over five minutes, without the consent of the Senate, while the Calendar of unobjected cases is being considered.

Mr. BACON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Missouri have liberty to proceed.

Mr. McCOMAS. I join in the request for unanimous consent that the Senator from Missouri may be permitted to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, loave will be greated.

leave will be granted.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I wanted simply to say that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. McComas] has confirmed exactly what I have said. We have always pensioned men when they were disabled while in the performance of any military duty; certainly we have pensioned members of the militia force when they were not mustered into the military service whenever they were in an engagement and were disabled. Congress can grant a gratuity, but it should not be on account of any military service. I am not opposing the measure to which the Senator from Maryland refers, because I think that man probably ought to have a gratuity, but not for military service. There must be a distinction maintained between the cases.

JOHN CHANDLER.

The bill (S. 197) granting an increase of pension to John Chandler was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of John Chandler, late of Company F, Second Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it seems to me that this class of bills, which are not very infrequent now, ought always to be accompanied by a report stating the principal circumstances of the honor, or at least that some Senator cognizant with the facts should state them to the Senate so that they can go on record.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, I will state that there has been a letter from the Secretary of State in every instance, stating the facts about the case. Many of these measures have been left unacted upon for several years, the decorations have been lying in the State Department, and the Secretary of State has been very anxious to get rid of them in some way. He recommended very strongly that action should be taken by the committee in reference to them and that Congress should finally dispose of the cases.

Mr. HOAR. That I am very glad to know, but the law prohibits such honors from foreign governments to persons in the military and naval service of the United States without the leave of Congress. The Constitution itself prohibits such acceptances by persons holding any office of profit or trust under the United States. I think that the law and the constitutional rule are, in general, wise and ought to be adhered to, but it is the custom that where a military or naval officer of the United States has rendered an act of conspicuous gallantry or some other conspicuous service to mankind or to a foreign country he shall be permitted as a mark of peculiar honor to receive such a decoration of honor. I do not object to that at all; I rather approve of it; but I think whenever it is done there should be put upon the record of Congress the reasons for such acceptance, either in the ordinary way of a report or by a statement of the facts on the floor of the Senate. It is very much for the advantage of the officer to have that done, because it makes his own country compared of his merit own country cognizant of his merit.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I will say to my colleague in this connection, as the chairman of the committee has stated, that we have always, in every case, a letter from the Secretary of State explaining the reasons before the committee acts. But the cases which have been submitted here without a report, as the chairman said, have been pending for a long time, and I think I am not mistaken in saying that nearly all of them passed the Senate last year and failed to pass the House.

Mr. HOAR. I think my colleague will agree that the facts should be made known, or the act of Congress ought to be observed.

Mr. LODGE. I agree entirely that the reasons ought to be set forth, but almost all of these bills had been passed upon heretofore both by the committee and by the Senate

Let me add in this connection what ought not to be overlookedthat the bills simply permit the acceptance of the decoration, or in some of the cases a watch is given for some service. The bills simply permit the acceptance. No decoration can be worn by any officer in the service of the United States in the Army or Navy.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I think the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is entitled to serious consideration by the Senate. The constitutional provision is a very broad one:

No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States; and no person holding any office of profit or trust under them shall, without the consent of the Congress, accept of any present, emolument, office, or title, of any kind whatever, from any king, prince, or foreign state.

There is reason for that provision of the Constitution. is a principle underlying it. I suppose the whole theory of leaving it to Congress to decide whether in a given case consent should be given which would make a particular person an exception to the constitutional rule was that there should be a full statement of the facts to Congress in order that they might judge.

I do not think that such bills ought to pass as a matter of course. That may be a narrow view of it, but I do not think so. I think sometimes it might very well happen that an officer in the service of the United States abroad might earn a decoration or a title or something of that sort in a manner which would not exactly meet with the approval of Congress.

I agree entirely with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]—and I judge that the Senator from Massachusetts who last spoke agrees with him also—that hereafter, when favorably reported by the committee, such bills should be accompanied by a report stating the character of the services rendered and the circumstances under which the decoration was given.

Mr. LODGE. The point I wish to make, and that I made before, is that almost every one of these cases was passed upon by the committee and reported favorably and passed by the Senate last year, and that is undoubtedly the reason why the letters of the Secretary of State have not been printed in the form of reports.

I wish also to state that the committee is not careless about this matter, and never has been. The chairman will recollect as well as I do that we have; on one occasion at least, stopped one of these decorations in the committee, and certainly it has never been the intention of the committee to report a bill allowing any decoration to be accepted that was not a proper one.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I will only state that I supposed the letter of the Secretary of State would be printed along with each bill, but the letters do not seem to be with the bills now. But as nearly all the bills had been heretofore acted upon by the committee and passed by the Senate, so far as I was concerned I supposed that was all that would be necessary in those cases. If a case should come up in which there was any doubt as to whether we should grant permission to accept a decoration, I for whether we should grant permission to accept a decoration, I for one would be in favor of a very rigid investigation, and I would oppose any bill that was of at all doubtful propriety.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not wish to object to this bill. I observe that quite a number have passed already, and this one was on the point of passage when I rose. It would be a little invidious to object to half of them and not to all, and I will not do But I wish the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations would undertake to have prepared at the State Department a document stating the reasons in regard to all these cases and send it to the Senate to be put with the bills hereafter, or he might have it done by his clerk.

Mr. CULLOM. I will say to the Senator that I went to the State Department this morning with the view of asking just that information from the Secretary of State. He did not happen to be there, and I did not suppose, as a matter of fact, that these bills would come up to-day.

bills would come up to-day.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator to have this information supplied hereafter.

Mr. CULLOM. When this case is disposed of, by the consent of the Senate I will move an executive session. I think the bill has not been disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I will state that this decoration was granted to Cantain McCalls on account of his service at the siege of Pekin

Mr. LODGE. I will state that this decoration was granted to Captain McCalla on account of his service at the siege of Pekin with the naval expedition. It was in recognition of services he rendered there.

colleague has itself put a laurel on the brow of Captain McCalla. I would value more than the decoration of the Emperor of Germany the statement of a Senator of my own country, and especially of my colleague. So no harm has been done by this discussion.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, January 8, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ON DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. MINOR of Wisconsin and Mr. Cochran of Missouri as the Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

I move that the House resolve itself into Mr. HEPBURN. Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the special order-House bill 3110.

Mr. MOON. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion for a moment that I may make a personal request.

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. MOON. My colleague, Mr. RICHARDSON, is quite sick and unable to attend to-day's session. I ask that he have leave of absence for to-day.

There being no objection, leave of absence was granted.

ISTHMIAN CANAL.

Mr. HEPBURN. I now renew my motion, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the special order.

The motion was agreed to. The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. Grosvenor in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3110) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

[Mr. SHACKLEFORD addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

ISTHMIAN CANAL

The committee again resumed its session.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Chairman, I realize that this is no time to discuss the needs or merits of a maritime canal. They are conceded by the voice of all parties, and therefore we may dismiss that part of the subject. After all these years of discussion, after all the money that has been expended in commissions as to the best route, it seems to me that it would be unfortunate if at the last moment we should fall into the fatal error of selecting the arrong route. I have always favored the Nicaragua Canal. Twee wrong route. I have always favored the Nicaragua Canal. wrong route. I have always lavored the Nicaragua Canal. I was not present when this bill was voted upon in committee, but I am free to say that had I been present I should have voted for it, and I certainly gave my assent to it afterwards. I have voted for the Nicaragua Canal because I thought it would be the best route that could be selected. I voted for it because the Commission reported in favor of it. I favored the Nicaraguan Canal because, until very recently, I believed that the transcontinental railroads were using the Panama Canal as an obstruction to any canal.

But I have satisfied myself, Mr. Chairman, that this is not the case at this time. I have satisfied myself that the transcontinental railroads are not behind this movement to-day. And I was sorry to hear my friend, the chairman of this committee, for whose opinion I have the highest regard, stigmatize as an obstructive measure any mention of the Panama Canal, structive measure any mention of the Panama Canal.

It is perfectly plain to me, Mr. Chairman, that the moving spirit of this offer comes from the French company itself. It is perfectly plain to every thinking man that the reason why this is brought forward to-day is that these people find themselves in the position of having expended or thrown away $260,000,000 on their enterprise, and are anxious to save some of it to themselves. That is all there is to-day to this fresh offer to sell the Panama Canal at $40,000,000, as it is rumored that we have.

I say it is rumored. A rumor is sometimes entitled to respect, and I think in a great matter like this it is entitled to respect.

and I think in a great matter like this it is entitled to respect to-day. We know that it is something more than a rumor. We know that the French company have an agent in this city to-day authorized to make an offer to the Commission of all the rights and property of the Panama Company for the sum of $40,000,000. Now, then, if it is a fact that the Commission would have recommended the Panama Canal, provided they could have got it for $40,000,000—and we are led to infer that they might have done this by their own report and if it is a fact as weareness. done this by their own report—and if it is a fact, as rumor says, that it has been offered for the sum of $40,000,000, then it seems to me that it is business for us to pause and take advantage of the new situation. It seems to me that it is business to give to this Commission an opportunity to revise their report and make a supplemental recommendation.

As it stands to-day, I am in favor of some such amendment as has been offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Morris]. I think it places the whole subject before us in a businesslike manner. I shall, therefore, Mr. Chairman, so far as I am advised at this present moment, support the Morris amendment, and I sincerely hope that the gentlemen of this House will awake to the situation and will not permit this Government to make a fatal error at this moment. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I am not on this committee, but I have given attention to the matter of an isthmian canal for but I have given attention to the matter of an isthmian canal for that I have given a long course of years. When the previous bill, in substantially the same terms, was before this House I offered an amendment, which I shall offer to-day, to strike out all reference to Nicaragua and Costa Rica, and to allow the President full discretion to obtain the control of the cont and to said to allow the Tresiter that the state to obtain territory for the canal from any foreign state; to strike out all reference to Grey Town and the terminus at Brito, and to authorize the President to build the canal by any route from the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific.

The amendment also adds the necessary clause that the President shall be authorized to acquire any property or franchises which are outstanding and necessary for the building of the canal. That amendment was offered then, and is offered now, bona fide, in order to secure the canal, and because these amendments will aid in the securing of the canal.

May I submit as part of my remarks a draft of the bill as it would be with these alterations (new matter in italics)?

May I submit as part of my remarks a draft of the bill as it would be with these alterations (new matter in italics)?

A bill to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to acquire for and in behalf of the United States control of such portion of territory now belonging to any foreign States as may be desirable and necessary on which to excavate, construct, and protect a canal, of such depth and capacity as will be sufficient for the movements of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, from the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific Ocean, and also to acquire any outstanding franchises or property that may be necessary for the construction of such canal; and such sum as may be necessary to secure such control is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 2. That when the President has secured full control over the territory, franchises, and property in section 1 referred to he shall direct the Secretary of War to excavate and construct a canal and waterway from a point on the shore of the Caribbean Sea to a point on the Pacific Ocean. Such canal shall be of sufficient capacity and depth as that it may be used by vessels of the largest tomage and greatest draft now in use, and shall be supplied with all necessary locks and other appliances to meet the necessities of vessels passing; and the Secretary of War shall also construct such safe and commodious harbors at the termini of said canal and such provisions for defense as may be necessary for the safety and protection of said canal and harbors.

SEC. 3. That in the excavation and construction of said canal such waterways now existing as may be made available shall be used.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I can not begin without paying my tribute to the gentleman [Mr. Hepburn] who has pressed this bill before this House for so many years. He deserves and will receive the thanks of the American people. With this canal his name will always be associated in their minds and in their hearts. I believe with him as I have believed heretofore that the time has come for action. If it were a private corporation-a railroad company or a canal company-that was going to do this work, its directors would say that enough information has been gathered to justify putting the matter in the hands of an executive committee. Whether for surveys or for building or for choice of routes we are not those who should act. Our action goes to the Senate and may be differed with. It goes to the President and may be differed with. When the choice is between two good things, the course for a railroad company would be to leave the matter to some small executive committee. When Congress must meet a question of this kind, the proper course is to leave it to the Executive provided by the Constitution, to be determined by him with the advice of his Cabinet

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Why should Congress shirk its well-understood legislative duty in determining this route? Why force that decision upon the President of the United States?

Mr. PARKER. Because, as I maintain, it is not the duty of Congress to determine on the details of the route; because those Congress to determine on the details of the route; because those details must depend on varying considerations. At the present moment there is talk of a protocol with Nicaragua. We know of none yet with Costa Rica; and the agreement of Costa Rica is just as essential as that of Nicaragua. If, on the other hand, either of those countries should try to get more for their territory than we think it honestly worth, we would have to submit to their demand if we determine upon a single route. If the President has the right to determine the route that shall be taken, according to the conditions and according to the mices that may be asked then all ditions and according to the prices that may be asked, then all parties and governments come to us as suitors.

To build this canal at Panama is to make of any town there the Alexandria of the new world—the connecting link and mercantile depot of the continent. To build it at Nicaragua is to open the whole interior of a vast and fertile country for settlement, colonization, and improvement. Why should they not be suitors? Why do we hear of good terms offered from Nicaragua now, and of willingness on the part of Costa Rica, and of a desire on the part of the Panama Canal Company to sell to us, but for the fact, the great fact, that we did not by a vote of the United States Congress two years ago settle on any one route, but said: "We will go where it is best to go."

Now, Congress does not desire to wait. I go further than the Now, Congress does not desire to wait. I go further than the gentleman to whom I have paid my tribute. When he says, "Give the power to the Executive," I say, Give it wholly, and do not bind him by conditions; give him the necessary discretion which any private corporation in a similar matter would give to its executive officers.

We hear of a new terminal in the city of New York for a great continental system of railroads. Would that terminal have been possible if that continental system had resolved beforehand that that particular location for the terminal was to be taken? If such had been the action of that corporation, they would have been obliged to pay ten prices for the property. They are known obliged to pay ten prices for the property. They are known always to want terminals, but they let their executive officers erform the executive duty of selecting and fixing the location of the terminals. If there were two possible routes for a railroad, would the directors resolve that the road shall be constructed by one of those routes, or would it leave to its executive management the opportunity to secure the route?

Mr. Chairman, we may not only congratulate the gentleman from Iowa upon his energy and zeal which has kept this matter before this House, but we congratulate him on the results. was that energy and zeal which forced into the appropriation bill, even if against his will, the provision for a new and careful survey of these regions. I was one of the few members who were convinced when this bill was before us heretofore that we had not convinced when this bill was before us heretofore that we had not sufficient information to make a decision, but must leave it to the President. The result of this Commission is a surprise to all members of this House. It has swept away the whole Menocal system of interior lakes. It has swept away the whole Menocal system of making dams by tumbling rocks of rubble into the water and letting the water flow over them. It has disposed of that idea as letting the water flow over them. It has disposed of that idea as a dream. It has found out that foundations were impossible at the point where Menocal put his dam. It has shown where better foundations can be put. It has investigated what had not been investigated before—the real conditions at Panama, now known for the first time. We were acting before much as the French engineers were acting-150 of them-who received and ratified without comment or investigation the ridiculous so-called surveys that were submitted to them at the beginning of the Panama Canal.

We are acting now upon information in reference to the Panama Canal, as well as the Nicaragua Canal, which warrants us in ac-tion. But let us not make that action insufficient. Let us put full power in the hands of the President to go where it may seem best, upon the conditions as they may arise, and upon the advice of the Commission, whom we all trust.

After investigating this report with care, I see great wisdom in it. We ordered that Commission to report which was the best They have had the wisdom, knowing that two routes were possible, not to report on one or the other absolutely, but that one or the other is better, according to the price for which we can obtain the Panama Canal franchises. This is the true position. It keeps the Panama Canal franchises. This is the true position. It keeps those States almost on their knees at our feet to grant us concessions. Do not by the vote of this House bar out either possible route, for if you do so you will double the price of the other. If you want to make a good bargain keep your minds open for either route. The choice is an Executive duty.

Now, sir, other things have occurred since two years ago. At that time England, under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, claimed rights in such a canal, and there was the danger of angering a great power. But even the opposition to the gentleman's bill which killed it so emphasized the determination of the American people to have a canal as to secure the surrender of that treaty and its abrogation.

We should not hamper the Executive in a matter which is reported to be doubtful. This report of the Commission is definite on that subject. We may condense the last four pages of their report as to the advantages of each route. They tell you that at Nicaragua the dam construction will be easier; that Nicaragua is nearer to us; that the climate there is healthier, and that the country is one which is fit to be opened and developed. That is all.

They tell us as to Panama that it is much easier there to regulate the water of the lake which must be in the center of either canal, and which in Panama will be self-regulating by overflow, while in Nicaragua there must be a careful arrangement of dams to impound the water and to maintain it at different heights in different parts of the year. They say that Panama has a railroad, different parts of the year. They say that Panama has a railroad, a harbor, and accommodations for labor, while Nicaragua has not, and that thus Panama has the advantage in the matter of ability to begin work now, without waiting. They tell you that the work at Panama is concentrated at but one point practically—the Culebra cut, and the dam, principally at the Culebra cut—and that this concentration will allow us to employ fewer laborers and more machinery and concentrate our staff and management. The length of the Panama Canal is 134.59 miles less than that of the Nicaragua Canal. It is a little over 49 miles long (49.09), while the Nicaragua Canal is over 183 (183.66). The canal proper, excluding lakes, is 36.41 miles long by the Panama route and 73.78 miles long by the Nicaragua route, a difference of nearly 37½ miles. Remember that every mile of canal is a danger to the navigation of large steamers in a narrow channel, with occasional winds and possible storms.

The report states also that the operation of the Panama Canal will be $1,300,000 per annum cheaper than the operation of the Nicaragua Canal; and if we borrow that money at 2 per cent, it represents a capital of $65,000,000. That is, the capital invested will be $65,000,000 less by the Panama route than by the Nicaragua route in the matter of permanent maintenance and operation

The summit at Panama is 28 feet less. The lift for vessels is 82 feet by the Panama route and 110 feet by the Nicaragua route. The locks on the Panama route are necessarily fewer.

In the curves of the canal there are 26.44 miles less by the Panama route than by the Nicaragua route, and when you add together the total curve in each canal there are 1,568 degrees less in the Panama route, which means that in the Nicaragua Canal there are curves which require in all 4½ complete circlings of a vessel more than in the Panama Canal. The considerations of safety which apply to the navigation of a big vessel in a narrow channel apply all the more when that vessel has to swing around a curve, and when the pilot must determine how far any part of the vessel is swinging away from the line originally drawn. the vessel is swinging away from the line originally drawn. We have a bridge connecting my own State with Staten Island, and since the construction of that bridge it has been impossible to tow the canal boats which used to pass along Staten Island Sound. Near the draw there is a turn, and the boats can not safely go through. This business has gone out of existence over that route. This matter of curves is serious. The time by the Panama route is much less. That time is estimated at twelve hours for Panama and thirty-three hours for Nicaragua. The transit for Panama and thirty-three hours for Nicaragua. must be by daylight, and thirty-three hours means three days instead of one, a difference that almost takes away the advantages of greater nearness.

All this we get simply from the four concluding pages of that report.

Add, that Panama has been surveyed, not only with the chain and transit and the diamond drill, but it has been surveyed by means of the experience which comes through hard and continuous work, so that every difficulty at Panama is known.

you come to Nicaragua, with more locks, with much more embankment, with at least one great dam, with so much greater length, the dangers in an earthquake region are greatly multiplied. May we add that, great as these engineers are, we know enough of drifting sand along the Atlantic coast to know that no great harbor has ever been constructed in those drifting sands? The harbor at Grey Town forty years ago had 30 feet of water, and it has not 6 feet now. It is filled with sand. The harbor which was rade by a jetty by the new Maritime Canal Company was dredged out to 13 feet, but that it is now filled with sand, and the jetty is broken down in many places. It is believed that we can construct a harbor there, but it is only a matter of belief.

I wish to thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] who spoke yesterday upon this bill. He said truly there are risks to any plan. He said truly that if we take no risks we will never construct any engineering work. We must take our risks in a matter so greatly affecting not only the Treasury of the United States, but the supremacy of the United States upon this continent and the growth of its Pacific slope. But when we put power in the hands of the President to execute the recommendations of the Commission who have investigated this subject let us give him power to execute all their recommendations.

The Commission report to us that as the Panama Canal Company asked $109,000,000 for their franchise and property we can pany asked $109,000,000 for their franchise and property we can not take it, and that it is better to go elsewhere. But the Commission substantially say that if that canal company will take the amount at which they value those franchises and the work done, including the Panama Railroad, then it will pay us to go there, provided, always, the proper treaties can be negotiated, either with the United States of Colombia or with Costa Rica or Nicaragua.

All this, Mr. Chairman, is a matter of executive management, to be managed by the Executive, who has charge of the job; and I appeal to this House not to fetter or bind the President of the United States and tie him up to any one line of action, but to give him the power to build and construct a canal for the largest vessels, from the Caribbean Sea to a point on the Pacific Ocean, with full power, also, to acquire either from the Governments or from any outside party the franchises and lands necessary to build that canal at the best place, so that we will be ready to proceed and construct it without being fettered to any one place.

My friend will say that this works for delay. No, sir. My friend will say that this works for delay. No, sir. A bill for a canal is called for by the people of the whole United States. It asks no more than they ask. It can not be hung up by the different opinion of any other body constituting this Congress as to the location of this canal. It must pass and go to the President and be executed. It is the particulars in this bill which will hold it back and provoke opposition and debate as to the question of contact. The time has come for action. route. The time has come for action. Let us leave the matter in hands where it is sure to be decided. Let us not ask that the Panama Canal should be adopted. Let us not ask that the Nicaragua Canal should be adopted. I disclaim the ability or the knowledge of the facts—facts still to a great extent unknown, facts as to the bearings of the countries who own this territory, facts that may develop after these executive surveys. I disclaim the right to decide. Provision must be made that the services of that great Commission should be continued and that action should be taken by the President of the United States with their advice.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday I gave notice in the House that at the proper time, if I should get an opportunity, I would offer an amendment, with a view of putting the proviso in this bill which I then sent to the Clerk's desk and had read, and reads that it has published in the Process. asked that it be published in the RECORD. I notice from the course which the debate has taken this morning that that resolution has at least put into crystallized form a proposition which seems to have been in the minds of many members of the House, and has thus furnished a basis of debate. I have no pride of authorship in that proviso. It may, perhaps, contain inaccuracies of language and some ambiguities. There is one which I shall correct in the final form in which I shall offer it; but it at least expresses the idea which I wished to convey.

And it is now proper, Mr. Chairman, that I should explain to the Henry proper of the language of the languag the House, perhaps in some detail, the object sought to be accomplished by this amendment. There is an overwhelming sentiment in the country and in this House in favor of an isthmian canal, and with that sentiment I am entirely in accord. We want an isthmian canal, and we want it built with as little delay as possible. We are willing, if necessary, to appropriate two hundred millions or more to accomplish this result. On that proposition I think I may say we are all practically agreed. That is a proposition on which any man, the people at large, may form a proposition on which any man, the people at large, may form a proper judgment, whether they have technical or scientific knowledge or not. That is a question of great national and commercial importance, which the people are capable of deciding for themselves, and which they have decided, and in favor of a canal. But, Mr. Chairman, we also want the best canal—the best as to location, the best as to the cost of maintenance and operation, the best as to its durability and freedom from danger of destruction. These are questions for scientific men, for skilled and competent experts. To determine these questions we passed an act in March, 1899, authorizing the appointment by the President of a Commission, whose duty it should be to make full and complete investigation, the most careful and searching investigation, of the Isthmian routes, and particularly the Nicaragua and Panama routes. To enable that Commission to make such careful, complete, and searching investigation we appropriated the large, I might say the enormous, sum of $1,000,000. That Commission was appointed. It was made up of the most eminent men that could be found in this country for character, capacity, and scientific and practical knowledge in their profession.

The Commission has made a most thorough and exhaustive investigation of both of these routes. In that investigation it has had the advantage of all the data that have been collected by every Commission or individual that had gone before as to the Nicara-gua route, and it has had the advantage as to the Panama route of all the data and knowledge that have been acquired by the eminent engineers who have had that in charge and have actually and practically been engaged in constructing a canal thereon. The result of that investigation is before us in this report.

I am obliged to say, Mr. Chairman, that before this report was published, and I read it, I did not believe in the Panama route at all. I did not believe there could be any question but that the Nicaragua route was the most feasible and practicable route across the Ishmus. And indeed I rather thought that the Panama route was not feasible or practicable at all. I believed, as some gentlemen has expressed it here this morning, that it was being made use of as a means for delaying us in going forward to prosecute the work of constructing a canal.

I had in mind the enormous losses which had occurred in the operations of the companies which had undertaken its construc-tion. I had in mind the foul scandals which had attached to it. I had in mind the fact that it had driven the great De Lesseps to prison and to his grave a disgraced and broken-hearted man. I had in mind the many millions of dollars that had been squandered in bribes and in what is known as promotion and financing, which are but other names for the process of exacting two dollars for are but other names for the process of exacting two dollars for furnishing one. And so I say I had no faith whatever in the Panama Canal project, or in its feasibility or practicability.

I had in mind all these things. But I am also obliged to say, Mr. Chairman, that since I have read this report and have had the benefit of the investigations and opinions of these great engineers I am myself unable to say which of these two routes I believe to be the better one. And I think any gentleman who will read this report will agree with me that he is unable to dearwhat route the Commission thinks would be the better one. what route the Commission thinks would be the better one, provided the complications and embarrassments which have grown up around the two Panama Canal companies had not arisen. I am inclined to think from what they say that if we could get equally as favorable concessions from Colombia as from Nicaragua and Costa Rica, and could be freed from the complications of the French companies, it would be, certainly it might be, their deliberate judgment that the Panama route was the better one.

Now, at the commencement of the undertaking of a work of such gigantic magnitude, a work that will certainly cost nearly two hundred millions, and may cost more, it certainly behooves us to act with the utmost wisdom. It certainly behooves us to give the most careful consideration to the report of these accomplished and eminent men. I do not propose to discuss the re-

I do not pretend to be able to give such technical information to this House as these men have been able to give, although I expect that perhaps my early training as a civil engineer might enable me to give some possible enlightenment upon the subject. I have listened to the argument of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Parker] in that direction, and agree in much that he has said; but in my opinion all of those questions are for the consideration of the experts. They are for the consideration of these men that we ourselves have authorized the appointment of, and for whose work we have made ample provision. I have the ut-most and most absolute confidence in them, and I accept, without question, their conclusions.

Now, let us just glance for a minute at what the actual summing up of the report is. What do they report? They report that it will cost one hundred and forty-four millions (in round numbers) to complete the Panama Canal; that in their opinion the work already done thereon, and the rights, property, and franchises of the companies which have been prosecuting that work are at present worth about $40,000,000, making in all as the cost to us, if we could secure this property for that sum and should undertake the completion of the Panama Canal, $184,000,000. On the Nicaragua route they report that it will cost one hundred and eighty-nine million eight hundred and odd thousand dollars, or, in round figures, $190,000,000. They also report that they have had a sort of tentative offer from the Panama Canal people of

These are the figures. They also report that there are certain complications connected with the rights, franchises, and concessions of the Panama Canal people which it will be troublesome to get rid of, and they wind up their report with this significant language. I call the attention of the House to it.

There are certain physical advantages—such as a shorter canal line, a more complete knowledge of the country through which it passes, and lower cost of maintenance and operation—in favor of the Panama route, but the price fixed by the Panama Canal Company for a sale of its property and franchises is so unreasonable that its acceptance can not be recommended by this Commission.

Now, if I interpret this language correctly, it at least bears the construction that if they had been able to get an offer of this property for what they considered it worth they would perhaps have made a different recommendation.

The Commission further says:

After considering all the facts developed by the investigations made by the Commission and the actual situation as it now stands, and having in view the terms offered by the new Panama Canal Company, this Commission is of the opinion that "the most practicable and feasible route" for an Isthmian canal, to be "under the control, management, and ownership of the United States," is that known as the Nicaragua route.

That is the final summing up of the report, leaving out all the technical part of it. Now, that is what has prompted me to draw this amendment. Let us examine it for a moment, if I may have this amendment. Let us examine it for a moment, if I may have the patience of the House, and see what it proposes. It proposes to hold open the door to the President of the United States to negotiate with the Government of the United States of Colombia and with all the parties interested in the Panama Canal to see whether or not we can get equally as favorable concessions from Colombia as from Nicaragua and Costa Rica, and whether or not we can purchase the property of this canal company free from the claims of all corporations or persons having any rights, liens, or claims thereon for the sum of $40,000,000 or less.

And it also provides that if we shall be able to accomplish these things, then the President of the United States shall again call to his assistance this Commission and ask for their advice, and hav-ing obtained their advice in favor of the Panama Canal route, that he shall be authorized to begin the construction of the canal route, that he shall be authorized to begin the construction of the canal on that line. That is what this proposition means. It has no purpose of delay, because I provide that all these things must be accomplished within six months.

I confess-for I want to be frank and candid with the House and the country-that I think this a short time for negotiations of this magnitude. But I have bowed to what seemed to be the impatience of the House at any idea of delay. I say there can be no delay under this provision, because we shall not be able within six months—anybody who knows anything of negotiations with people of Spanish descent knows that we shall not be able within six months—to finish the negotiations with the result of Nices six months—to finish the negotiations with the people of Nicara-gua and Costa Rica which will be necessary to give us the proper rights along that route.

So that the President, while negotiating with Nicaragua and Costa Rica, is permitted also to negotiate with the United States of Colombia—I believe that is the name—at the same time. We give notice to that Government and to the Panama Canal people that we will stand no further dickering and delay; and we give notice to Nicaragua that we will not be imposed upon.

These are the things which, according to my idea, will be accomplished by this amendment or proviso. And then the appropriation is made of $40,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to buy these rights, and $10,000,000 to go on with the

Now, mark you, if these things are not brought about within the time thus fixed, then the construction of the Nicaragua Canal will go right on. And I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa will go right on. And I want to say to the gentleman from lowa that I shall not suffer myself to be placed in a position of opposition to an Isthmian canal. If I shall be unable to secure the adoption of this amendment I shall vote for the bill. But I propose this amendment to this House as a plain business proposition. The gentleman from Iowa yesterday suggested the idea that we might go on and pass this bill, and then if it should subsequently be found that these things could be brought about and that it was desirable to adopt this route, we could deal with the conditions as they arise and could change the law to suit them. that it was desirable to adopt this route, we could deal with the conditions as they arise and could change the law to suit them. Let gentlemen examine this bill. If we pass it in its present form, what do we practically say to the President? We say to him, "We have, after due care and deliberation, selected the Nicaraguan route." Will he, in the face of that declaration by us, enter upon any negotiations for any other route? Would he have the right to enter upon any such negotiations? Would there not be the positive mandate of the law that he should construct this earnal along the Nicaraguan route, whether it was well to do this canal along the Nicaraguan route, whether it was well to do it or not, and no matter whether or not it should be subsequently ascertained that it could be more advantageously constructed on the other route.

More than that, may he not, if he goes on to make these negotiations with Nicaragua without notice to her or to the world that we propose also to negotiate with Colombia, and indeed without authority to negotiate with the latter Government, bind this Government by stipulations by which we shall be in honor bound to construct the Nicaragua Canal along the route proposed, no matconstruct the Nicaragua Canar along the route proposed, no matter whether the other route shall turn out to be the better or not. This is the situation with which we are confronted. This amendment provides against all these things, leaving us free to deal with Colombia and the Panama Canal people, and at the same time leaving this bill just as it is, in case of a decision within six months by the President and the Commission that the Panama Canal people is not the brill and the commission that the Panama Canal is not to be built, authorizing the work to be done on the Nicaragua Canal at the earliest possible time.

I have tried within the limited time allowed me to give expression as clearly and concisely as I could, without reference to scientific or technical questions, without reference to the advantages of either route, to the idea that as business men we should defer to the judgment of those men whose knowledge makes them the best judges, and should be guided by their advice, and that we should hold the door open so that our people may take advantage of the very best route. It seems to me that this is plain common sense. It is plain business sense, and it is wise statesmanship.

Now, this is about all I have to say. We are about to enter upon a work, not a work of a decade, not a work of a century, but a work which will be a monument to the glory and power of this nation for a thousand years to come; and I venture to express the hope that the name of my friend from Iowa may, as it deserves, go down to posterity for all time to come associated with that glory for his services to the country in securing an isthmian

I do not speak in opposition to a canal. I simply ask that this House shall so act that we may be able to choose the very best route for a canal. I might say a great many things in favor of the Panama route; I might say some things against the Nicaragua route. I do not choose to. I wish to be guided by the scientific experts we have employed. I am ready to accept their judgment. But I want it to be a final and complete indepent. I think that Experts we have employed. I am ready to accept their judgment. But I want it to be a final and complete judgment. I think that as business men, deciding upon a similar matter, we would be guided by the advice of our lawyers, or our doctors, or our architects, or our engineers, or whatever other skilled men we might be in the habit of employing. That is the whole proposition. As I said in the beginning, I have no pride of authorship in this amendment or proviso. I am ready to accept any other amendment which carries the same idea and accountishes the same purpose. ment which carries the same idea and accomplishes the same purpose. I simply ask that the House pause, and, if possible, hold this door open to us so that we may enter therein if we wish to.

[Applause.]
Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that this bill failed in the Fifty-sixth Congress. I shall be equally glad to see it pass in the Fifty-seventh. A minority of this House—not a very large minority—voted against a similar bill in May, 1900. But conditions have changed since then.

It is in no spirit of blame or fault-finding with those gentlemen whose enthusiasm for this magnificent project caused them to vote for the pending measure in 1900 that I say the short space of twenty months has abundantly vindicated the course of the minority. Several objections were set forth by that minority then. The first was that no such bill as this should pass until the diplometric interior was allow. matic situation was clear. There was an existing treaty with Great Britain which forbade our passing that measure. This country can not afford to take any attitude except that of scrupulous regard for treaty engagements with all nations, strong or weak, anywhere upon the globe. Since then a treaty with Great Britain has been ratified which supersedes the former one and makes the way clear. Equally important was the settlement of the situation created by the existence of treaties between Nicaragua on the one part and Spain, France, and Belgium on the other, providing that each of those nations should have equal rights with any other in any canal or waterway which might be constructed across the Isthmus. That situation is also provided for.

Another contention of the minority was that the canal should be a neutral one. Anything else would-invite attack and make this great enterprise one for the promotion of war rather than of peace. If this canal does not stand upon the solid basis of commercial benefit it has no standing at all, and we had best not have anything to do with it. If it does not also stand on the basis of equal opportunity to all nations for passage between the two oceans, then it has no rational foundation. In giving to the shipping of all countries equal advantage we shall best promote our own trade and the sale of our own products. This also has been

I was a little amused by the remarks of my friend from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD], who said he desired that the American eagle might find his place on the highest crag in the neighborhood of this canal and scream. If there is any place, gentlemen of the committee, where the American eagle ought not either to sit or to scream, it is on this canal. True, we can not do without the American eagle. Without him a type of very eloquent oratory would languish and die. [Laughter.] Then, too, the American eagle is not a bad bird. He flies gracefully aloft, flaps his wings, and never goes backward. He never sits on the fence; but I do not think it is altogether safe for us always to follow this lovely but sometimes predatory hird as an example in our this lovely but sometimes predatory bird, as an example in our diplomatic and other policies. [Applause and laughter.]

It would cause us to follow the lead of some men who are advocating war, who themselves were never within 4,000 miles of the cannon's mouth and have no immediate intention of ever getting there. [Laughter.] It would cause us to adopt a policy of boastfulness and of grab where one of amity and of liberality ought to prevail. If the idea of those who have spoken in favor of an American canal and a policy of exclusiveness were to preof an American canal and a policy of exclusiveness were to prevail, I fear that in the years to come we would find somewhere in the desolate wastes of Nicaragua a monument on which would be inscribed at the top, "This is on the route of a proposed but abandoned canal," and on the base, in larger letters, would be written the words, "The American eagle is vindicated." [Laughter.]

This is a plain business proposition and we should consider it as such.

Another contention of the minority was that the Commission which had been appointed should complete their report. That report has been completed. The Commission was made up of most eminent men, including some who are at the very head of the profession, both in civil and military life. One man was a statistician and economist of ability, and another has had large experience in public life, having been a member of the Senate. Another member was a retired naval officer who during his active service was one of the ablest and most respected naval officers this country has ever furnished.

That Commission was the first body which ever examined all the projected routes across the Isthmus. It was the first to give elaborate and thorough examination to the whole subject, and it did its work very thoroughly. It found that the numerous surveys that had been made were faulty or incomplete. One of the first things discovered by the Commission was that the site therestore subjected for the great day in the Sen Linear Direct in Nice. first things discovered by the Commission was that the site theretofore selected for the great dam in the San Juan River, in Nicaragua, was located in the wrong place; that a sufficient foundation could not be obtained there. They found another and a better locality. They examined the proposed routes across the Isthmus of Darien, and in brief they exhausted the field and made comparison of the different routes.

Now Lam not altogether satisfied with the work which has

Now, I am not altogether satisfied with the work which has been done. It is not the fault of the Commission; but the Panama Company, having certain concessions in Colombia and having performed considerable work there, although recognizing the demand of this country for a canal to be built and owned by the Government, not only waited until the eleventh hour before making any proposition, but they waited until after the twelfth, so that the Commission was unable to decide between the two most prominent routes as purely engineering propositions.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Propositions to whom?

Mr. BURTON. That is, propositions for building that waterway by the two routes. It was desirable that they should be compared on an equal footing. The price for the concessions obtained and the work done on one of those routes was then placed at so and the work done on one of those routes was then placed at so unreasonable a figure that it was eliminated from the consideration of the Commission, and they were not able to give that route its proper place in comparison with the others.

I repeat what I said in 1900, that the question of the engineering features is one for experts. I went elaborately into the question of the comparative advantages of the respective routes at that time, as they appeared to one not an engineer, giving five particulars in which one route was preferable and five in which the other lars in which one route was preferable and five in which the other was to be preferred. It does not seem best for me to take the time of the House in going elaborately over that ground again.

So far as the political phases of this question are concerned, this House is the most competent body to decide. So far as the general commercial phases are concerned, this House or Congress is also the most competent body to decide; but when it comes to the engineering features, it is a question for experts. I have given a great deal of attention to a comparison of these two routes. It is a most interesting pursuit, but I should feel that I was not only very bold, but even rash, if, without experience as an engineer or even going over the ground, I were to give an opinion as to which, in point of construction and operation, is the better. I am frank to say that my leanings, so far as I have any, are toward the Panama route.

It would seem that the shortness of that route is an advantage which in time will tell powerfully in its favor. In the construction of a canal of this nature there are a number of other things to be considered. There is the possibility of establishing dry docks and repair shops for the boats that go through. Many of these boats will have made long voyages, and repairs will be nec-sary.

One difference in favor of the Nicaragua route is alleged to arise from the fact that by reason of the winds it would afford easier access to sailing vessels than the Panama, but it is a question whether there is not a countervailing disadvantage to the Nicaragua route for those sailing vessels in having to go through a canal of so considerable length, where for at least the greater a canal of so considerable length, where for at least the greater proportion of the distance a sailing vessel could only go by the aid of a tug, and where, by reason of sharp curves, in many places two or more tugs would be required, one in front, to furnish the motive power, and another behind, to prevent the vessel from sheering against the bank.

Another question of importance is the expense of insurance. A few years ago some gentlemen in Boston, New York, and Portland were very much disturbed because of prospective loss of traffic from their respective cities to Europe because of probable increase of traffic on the route down the St. Lawrence, which was much shorter than from the cities named. But it developed that much shorter than from the cities named. But it developed that the advantages of the shorter route were neutralized by the rates of insurance, which were much higher by the St. Lawrence route than by that in the open sea from New York, Portland, and Boston.

There is a natural impatience at delay in this matter, but it seems to me this House ought to adopt either the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Morris] or that by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Parker]. Both are guarded carefully. One leaves the whole matter to the President. He unquestionably would call upon the Commission already in existence for assistance, and would be influenced by their judgment. The other definitely selects the Panama route, provided the concessions and conditions are as favorable as can be obtained by the

Nicaragua route.

This latter amendment puts one route against the other, and provides that the Panama route shall not be selected unless the political and territorial concessions are as favorable as by the other and is recommended by a majority of the Commission; and then there is added a provision which forecloses the possibility of delay, to the effect that all this shall be done within six months. If the Panama route should be selected, three things would have to be attended to very carefully: first, the validity of the title to be conveyed by the French company; second, the cession of a strip of 6 to 10 miles wide over the route, in which we should have police and sanitary jurisdiction, both at the time of the construc-This latter amendment puts one route against the other, and strip of 6 to 10 miles wide over the route, in which we should have police and sanitary jurisdiction, both at the time of the construction and the operation of the canal; third, and most important of the three, is the concession or lease from the Colombian Government. Now, the lease of the company is for ninety-nine years. That ought to be made perpetual. In an enterprise of such great magnitude as this ninety-nine years is a very brief period. Unless these three conditions are complied with the Panama route is out of the question. of the question.

One other point in favor of the Panama route which I intended to mention before was forcibly brought to my attention a few days ago by a prominent official who has carefully examined both projects, namely, that the examination upon that route has been projects, namely, that the examination upon that route has been more carefully made than upon the other and that there is far less danger of disagreeable surprises either in the construction or the operation of the canal. There is one part of the engineering work that presents a greater difficulty than any upon the other route, but the full extent of the difficulty has been measured and discounted.

One word about the future of this canal. No trade millennium will follow its construction. It is probable that during its entire existence the traffic will be considerably less in tonnage and still less in value than that by the Suez.

The water routes approaching the Suez Canal are bordered by countries that are richer and more populous. It also affords a shorter route between a more considerable number of the great shorter route between a more considerable number of the great commercial centers. The average haul, whether by the Panama or the Nicaragua route, will be longer. In the construction it is probable that there will be difficulties not anticipated, and at times that element which is fickle and sways from one side to the other, an element that is now shouting the loudest for a canal, will say that it would have been better if we had never undertaken it. But the unanswerable argument for this project is that the developments of this commercial era demand a water-way between the two great ceases. way between the two great oceans.

It is the next great step in the commercial growth of this country, and if we enter upon it we must do so with no thought of turning back. It is desirable that we should go at it wisely, deliberately, and select the best route, and, when this has been done and the way has been cleared, go ahead with that vigor and pluck which characterizes the American citizen in peace or in war. In the march of progress the dreams of one century are the realities of the next. For four hundred years a canal has been realities of the next. For four hundred years a canal has been under consideration. It has been attempted by Spaniards and by Frenchmen. It has engaged the attention of men of many other nationalities. Now, let this country, with its unlimited resources, with its great energy, with its ambition for the future, like a giant, take hold of this enterprise and push it to a successful completion. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to say a word on the Isthmian Canal bill, and I should not if I had not received two letters which I want to law before the Henre.

letters which I want to lay before the House.

The first letter is written by a civil engineer of high reputation living in my State, who has been employed on the Panama Canal for six and a half years. He gives his testimony as an expert, but in line substantially with what the gentleman from Ohio has just said: and I ask the careful consideration of the letter by the members of the House.

On Saturday last, while at home, I casually met the gentleman on the street. He said to me: "Mr. Hill, I think you are making on the street. He said to me: "Mr. Hill, I think you are making a mistake if you do not vote to accept the French proposition for the sale of the Panama Canal." A year ago he said the same thing, substantially, and wrote me a letter on the subject, and I referred it to Admiral Walker. Admiral Walker requested me to write to Professor Ward and ask him to come down here, that he might have a consultation with him, which he did do the week before the Commission went to the Isthmus.

The letter is as follows:

BRIDGEPORT, CONN., January 5, 1902.

The letter is as follows:

Hon. E. J. Hill., M. C.

Sii: In reply to your request that I give you my reasons for the superiority of the Panama route over that of Nicaragua, I desire to say that I have no other interest in the matter but that of our country, that we may have the best.

My experience on the Isthmus of Panama has been about six years and a half, of which two years were with the American Dredging Company, with the first canal company. The Commission have seen our work.

When the new company was organized I returned to the Isthmus and for four years and a half saw proven to my satisfaction that the canal of Panama is feasible, even to "tide level," the latter project being simply a question of money. Work concentrated on the great Culebra cut was decided on, and we saw day by day disappear the old bugbear of the "famous moving mountain," and it is proven beyond a doubt that the slopes of the cut will stand; and we proved that the Chapres River was another bugbear easily disposed of. To be brief, the advantages of Panama are these:

1. Two excellent ports connected by a well-constructed and equipped rail-road parallel to the canal line, connecting with every camp.

2. An established line of steamships between New York and Colon, also owned by the railroad company.

3. A competent equipment of engines, cars, and rails on the actual seene of work, together with well-equipped and powerful machine shops ready for immediate use.

4. Ten thousand laborers could be housed at a day's notice, and almost as speedily fed. There are abundant tools on the spot for immediate use.

5. The actual and definite plans of and for the actual completion of the canal are the ones now in operation.

The experimental work is done; conditions, and positive ones, are established.

6. At Panama the dangers of serious damage to the works from earthquakes are very slight. Can this be asserted for Nicaragua, almost within the storm-center of these convulsions of nature?

Do the American people know that the Panama Railroad is owne

P. S.-I have given it to you as I feel it.

Now, gentlemen, I have hesitated very seriously as to the propriety of my course in this matter, for I am fully aware that any action on the part of any member here looking to any other than the positive and direct passage of this bill as presented by the committee will be considered as a matter of delay.

I received a letter from another gentleman, a prominent manufacturer in my State, and I desire to say that the gentleman not only represents leading manufacturing interests in my State, but also has establishments in New York, Philadelphia, Boston,

Washington, New Orleans, and San Francisco.

I refer to a letter of J. W. Stone, president of the Nonpareil Cork Manufacturing Company. He says:

I appreciate the fact that public sentiment has generally crystallized in favor of the Nicaragua route, but that is unquestionably due to the fact that a great many people feel that the canal has been retarded by hostility and improper efforts of the transcontinental railroads, and they regard any further consideration or talk about this matter as only another effort of the enemies of the canal to again postpone its construction.

The physical advantages of the Panama Canal are so obvious, according to the various accounts which the leading scientific and technical publications of this country have given us, that it seems to me we can well afford to wait a short time, if by waiting we can secure this route. Moreover, the work already accomplished on the Panama line would cut down the total time of construction of the canal, so that, even if it were begun a year later than the Nicaragua, it would be completed in very much shorter time.

Then the writer of this letter goes on to present another consideration, which is worthy the serious thought of members of the

Moreover, the political side of the question should be given reasonable consideration, it seems to me. It is not within the limits of reasonable possibility that if we construct the Panama Canal any foreign power will ever feel called upon to attempt another canal across the Isthmus, and it would be a manifest act of unfriendliness to the United States if this were done. On the other hand, if we construct the Nicaragua Canal it seems to me quite possible that some foreign power, desirous of gaining a foothold in that part of the world, might complete the Panama Canal under cover of the French company, in which case we would have no possible pretext for objecting, though we might have a very clear understanding that the new canal meant trouble sconer or later for the United States. It seems to me, in the present state of affairs, not utterly impossible that Germany might feel disposed to take some action of this kind, and it could be done in very similar fashion to that in which the British Government practically built the Suez Canal and, as we all know, controls it to-day, although officially the British Government does not appear in its management.

He now proceeds to speak of the manufacturing interests of his

He now proceeds to speak of the manufacturing interests of his own particular company—

own particular company—

we certainly have every reason to desire as much speed as possible in the construction of the canal, for our business on the Pacific coast is rapidly growing, and we have at the present time between 20 and 30 carloads of our material to be shipped to San Francisco before the 1st of May, and while our relations with the railroad companies are very pleasant, and the through freight rates we have satisfactory, nevertheless, as all the railroads are under one control in the matter of rates, and competition thereby eliminated, we never know at what time there may be an unfavorable change in this regard. The canal across the Isthmus would afford the necessary competition, and steady existing rates, if it did not lower them.

I feel, in view of our position, therefore, that we are as thoroughly interested as any manufacturer in seeing a prompt construction of the canal, and yet I believe a reasonable time used to obtain control of the Panama route, which the French company seems now disposed to sell us on reasonable terms, will be well employed, and prove the speedier method of construction in the end.

Should your consideration of the matter lead you to take a position along these lines, in the discussion of the canal in the House, I feel confident that your constituents, at any rate the large manufacturing interests, would strongly support you in it.

Thanking you for requesting my opinion, I remain,

Very truly, yours,

J. H. STONE, President.

J. H. STONE, President.

Mr. Chairman, I have nothing further to add except to say that, in view of the reasons presented in these letters, I shall vote in favor of the alternative plan, presumably the Parker amendment.

Mr. BURGESS obtained the floor.

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURGESS]

will yield for a moment, I would like to ask the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] a question. He has stated that his opinion was somewhat affected by the statement of his correspondent or his friend that the Panama Canal would be much more expeditiously completed than the Nicaragua Canal could be. I wish to know whether he has taken into consideration in that connection the opinion of the Commission in regard to the difficulty presented by the Culebra cut, the opinion of the Commission being that eight years would be required to dispose of that cut?

Mr. HILL. I do not know that that consideration would necessarily affect the case if we have a railroad running the entire that the the consideration would necessarily affect the case if we have a railroad running the entire that the consideration would necessarily affect the case if we have a railroad running the entire that the consideration would necessarily affect the case if we have a railroad running the entire that the consideration would necessarily affect the case if we have a railroad running the entire that the consideration would necessarily affect the case if we have a railroad running the entire that the consideration would necessarily affect the case if we have a railroad running the entire that the consideration would necessarily affect the case if we have a railroad running the entire that the consideration would necessarily affect the case if we have a railroad running the entire that the consideration would necessarily affect the case if we have a railroad running the entire that the consideration would necessarily affect the case if we have a railroad running the entire that the consideration would necessarily affect the case if we have a railroad running the entire that the consideration would necessarily affect the case if we have a railroad running the entire that the consideration would necessarily affect the case if we have a railroad running the entire that the consideration would necessarily affect the case if we have a railroad running the entire that the consideration would necessarily affect the case if we have a railroad running the entire that the consideration would necessarily affect the case if we have a railroad running the entire that the consideration would necessarily affect the case if we have a railroad running the entire that length of the canal, so that work may be carried on upon different parts of the canal at the same time. I can see how such a problem would affect the case of the Nicaragua Canal until a problem would affect the case of the Mcaragua Canai until a railroad had been built; but on that route a railroad being fully completed and in operation, the work on the Panama Canal could be carried on upon different parts of the route at the same time.

Mr. HEPBURN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HILL. Consequently the difficulty at particular points would not necessarily extend the time of the completion of the

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly not, if they were all undertaken simultaneously. But the ultimate time required for completion of the work will be controlled by the portion of the work requiring the longest time; and the disposition of this cut, the commissioners say, will consume eight years, while no single work upon the other canal will, in the estimate of the Commission, occupy more than four years.

Mr. HILL. The problem is parallel with the construction of the underground tunnel now going on in New York City. is being carried on through the entire length of the line, the dif-ferent points to meet at a future time. The operation of the rail-road in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal would give us precisely the same advantage, which we would not possess in connection with the Nicaragua route unless we construct a railroad.

Mr. Burgess rose.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burgess] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I should like to ask the gentleman from Connecticut a question.

Mr. BURGESS. I am certainly willing if it does not come out of my time.

Mr. HILL. I have no control of that.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is called for. The gentleman from Texas will proceed.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I regret, especially as a new member, that my sense of duty impels me to criticise a section of this bill; and lest some carping critic, by reason of what I shall say, shall hereafter accuse me of joining with any real or imagined forces to defeat this measure, I desire to say that I am in thorough sympathy with the distinguished chairman who reported this bill when he says that the time for delay is past and that the American people demand that a waterway shall be constructed now, linking together the two great oceans that bathe the shores of the greatest Republic in the world. But fear of adverse criticism ought not to deter even a new member from doing here what he must do everywhere if he would succeed; that is, stand upon what his independent tells him is right and wice. his judgment tells him is right and wise.

With reference to the diverse routes proposed and discussed here I shall for two reasons support the bill without amendment as to route. First, I defer to the wisdom of the great committee before whom this whole matter, I am sure, was fully considered; and second, I defer to the wisdom of a great party to which it is an honor to belong and which declared in its last national plat-form in favor of the Nicaraguan route. That declaration, as well as the wisdom of the committee who have fixed it in the bill, binds me to the support of that route.

Now, this great project presents itself naturally to the reasonable mind in two views—first, as a commercial aid; second, as a military work. With reference to the first proposition, perhaps no State in the American Union feels a deeper interest in this work or has a more profound hope of seeing it undertaken and successfully accomplished than that State which in part I have the honor to represent, nor does any district in any State feel, in my judgment, quite so deep an interest in this great canal as the seaport city lying in the district which I have the honor to represent—Galveston—stricken by a great storm, but still the open door of the great Northwest to the ocean and a world's commerce. The commercial importance of this project can scarcely be over-estimated except in point of time of accomplishment. Given its completion and the run of years, and imagination can scarcely conceive what effect upon this country and its commerce such a magnificent waterway would have. Thoughtful men recognize magnificent waterway would have. Thoughtful men recognize the factor of transportation as one of the controlling elements in commercial growth, development, and supremacy; and in the shortening of the route from our ports to the trade of the Orient and the development of our commercial world supremacy, which is ours if we but grasp the opportunity and use it for all it is worth, thoughtful men recognize that this canal increases all the powers and opportunities that he before us.

But this is equally true of the military feature of this canal. While it shortens the route to the markets of the Orient, it shortens the route by which the Pacific may aid the Atlantic and the Atlantic aid the Pacific in the event of war with any foreign foe. The famous run of the Oregon around South America furnishes us with a vivid picture of what it might be worth to us in the event of war to be at this canal, so fortified and controlled. in the event of war to have this canal so fortified and controlled as that immediately upon a declaration of war it could be seized by America, who owns it, and whose money built it, and whose President negotiated the treaty permitting the investment of the money and the consummation of the project, and protect her citizens by all the military advantages that the canal when fortified would give us in the event of war.

In pressing this I am not urging upon this House any delay about this matter at all. Practically I am in favor of no amendment with reference to this bill except a simple provision cutting out the ambiguous language that closes section 2 of the bill and out the amonguous language that closes section 2 of the bill and fixing it beyond all question and dispute so that without reference to treaty, without reference to divers opinions of distinguished Senators, without reference to the discretion of any Secretary of War, however able and honest, now or hereafter, the American people shall declare here and now, through their elected representatives, that they desire this canal fortified so as to be controlled against any foreign power in the event of war, and utilized for our advantage. It is useless to argue that this language commands that, although it may be asserted, perhaps, that it permits it.

The distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] was asked yesterday with reference to the fortification of this canal, and he asserted, and I agree with him entirely, that America has the right to fortify the canal. But it is not a question of having the right; it is a question of exercising the right at this time. It is not a question of abstract right existing in the people to brush away treaties and to build fortifications at some future time, but it is a question, in my judgment, of starting right at the beginning and declaring in such express words that no ambiguity can arise when the discretion of the Secretary of War becomes involved under this provision.

This provision reads:

and the Secretary of War shall also construct such safe and commodious harbors at the termini of said canal, and such provisions for defense, as may be necessary for the safety and protection of said canal and harbors.

Under that what must of necessity be constructed? What does that command the Secretary of War to do? It commands him to construct safe and commodious harbors at the termini of the canal. I think that is clear and needs no amendment.

And such provisions for defense as may be necessary-for the safety and protection of said canal and harbor.

I judge it will be frankly conceded that it is not designed by the committee reporting this bill that the Secretary should, under that provision, be directed to exercise the right of the United States to fortify the canal. If I am wrong in that assumption, then I would differ from the committee if they placed that construction upon this large recommend.

This bill, when passed, will be subject to the provisions of the treaty recently ratified, except in so far as by its express terms any provision of that treaty may be abrogated, as could be done by act of Congress, under numerous decisions of the Supreme Court. But with that ambiguous language, in my judgment, the treaty recently ratified bears the reasonable construction that the power of the United States to fortify and to use it as an arm of the military power in the event of hostilities is eliminated and withdrawn, proscribed, if you please, by the contracting power, Great Britain, with whom the treaty was negotiated. And, so far as I am concerned, I am frank to say I am actuated by no bitterness when I speak of Great Britain.

I have nothing in my bosom that rankles against the country these blood my bosom that rankles against the country in the second sec whose blood mingles with ours, whose laws, whose religion, and whose literature have enriched those of the great Republic of this western continent. But if there ever was a people on earth who are in the habit of getting everything they could—from a Bible are in the habit of getting everything they could—from a Bible to a Boer—they are the people of Great Britain, and that is the simple truth. If there ever was a country that was in the habit of asserting every right that could plausibly be maintained and successfully enforced, it has been Great Britain. The growing commercial supremacy that is certainly in the future for America will provoke the alarm, envy, and selfish greed of foreign nations, and war may come because in nearly every war commerce, trade and greed were its causes. trade, and greed were its causes.

Something may suddenly arise which, in the opinion of some other country, may make it necessary to try to check the threatother country, may make it necessary to try to check the threat-ened world's supremacy of American commerce, and we may get into a war with Russia, with France, with Germany, or even with England, and if we should become engaged in a war with either one of these countries England would be in a position, for her own commercial protection, to assert her own construction of this treaty and to unite, in order to cripple us and throttle our trade, with such foe if we attempted to utilize our canal, built trade, with such foe if we attempted to utilize our canal, built with American money.

I tell you, in my judgment this simple language in this second section has more of interest for weal or woe to the American people in the future than any given number of words of ten times the number in the bill. War is always a possibility, sometimes a probability; and it might arise suddenly, as wars have arisen, especially in this Republic. Now is the time, with the wisdom of this Congress, upon a nonpartisan measure indorsed in the platforms of both the great parties of this country, indorsed by every American citizen, for the patriotism of this body to unite in providing in this bill for the military power of this country as well as the mere commercial aid to the country.

Whether you want war or are opposed to war, you ought to favor the fortification of the canal. If you want war, this is one of the agencies which prevent war. If you are for high tariff or for low tariff, if you are for anti-imperialism or imperialism, if you are for the eagle or the pelican, if you are for America and American supremacy, you ought to be for the fortification of this canal, which will certainly be built, and give us absolute domination in connection with a great navy that will be built, and or the large of the partity on both the Pacific and Atlantic, and make domination in connection with a great navy that will be built, and ought to be built, on both the Pacific and Atlantic, and make true for all time the Monroe doctrine on the Western Hemisphere.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague's time may be extended ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Texas may be extended ten minutes.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to the provision of the treaty recently ratified, not in any spirit of reflection on any of the distinguished Senators who considered the treaty or anybody else, but for the sole purpose of showing, now that it is ratified, how it affects this project now under consideration.

I take it I need not pile up law books here to get the lawyers of this House to agree to two propositions. First, that as a general rule war suspends the operation of a treaty. Second, that a clear exception to the rule well recognized by the leading writers upon international law is that if by the terms of the treaty a state of hostility is contemplated and provided for, then the rule, instead of applying, the converse is true, and the obligation to maintain the treaty is increased by war, because made in contemplation of war, just as any contract between individuals binds them in every essential as contemplated by the parties as expressed in the instrument.

Now look to this treaty, and what do we find? Not only that in the old treaty, which this purports to abrogate, we are prohibited from fortifying the canal in express terms, but in this there is no prohibition, it is true, except a clearly implied one, in my judgment, in the provision which I want to read to you.

SEC. 2, ART. 3. The canal shall never be blockaded, nor shall any right of war be exercised nor any act of hostility be committed within it.

Now, another well-known rule is that a qualifying phrase fixes the meaning of the phrase that it qualifies.

The United States, however, shall be at liberty to maintain such military police along the canal as may be necessary to protect it against lawlessness and disorder.

If that does not by every reasonable intendment to the legal mind prohibit the United States from fortifying the canal then I have misunderstood the rules of law as I have gathered them from the books. Why expressly permit us in terms "the police power," preceded by the word "however," and following the sentence "that no act of hostility shall be committed within the canal," unless the necessary construction was intended that it bars the right of the United States to fortify the canal?

Again: No belligerent-Says section 4-shall embark or disembark troops, munitions of war, or warlike materials in the canal except in case of accidental hindrance of the transit, and in such case the transit shall be resumed with all possible dispatch.

Tell me, gentlemen, that that does not contemplate war and provide for it.

Section 5 further provides:

The provisions of this article shall apply to waters adjacent to the canal, within 3 marine miles of either end. Vessels of war of a belligerent shall not remain in such waters longer than twenty-four hours at any one time except in case of distress, and in such case shall depart as soon as possible; but a vessel of war of one belligerent shall not depart within twenty-four hours from the departure of a vessel of war of the other belligerent.

Now, I read these provisions for the purpose of demonstrating my position, which is this: That under this provision of the bill which authorizes the Secretary of War to make certain provisions for the defense of the canal, and this treaty which is now binding, that the Attorney-General of the United States, or any other respectable lawyer, would be forced to decide that we could not fortify the canal, and it would take a specific act of Congress abrogating the treaty hereafter to do it. Whether that is true or not there is doubt about it. Meet the doubt by amending the bill now. If there is no doubt about it, do now what ought to be done and will be done by command of the American one more thing, and I am done. Somebody says that war suspends this treaty. Suppose we admit that. Did you ever hear of the man who had an uncovered house in Arkansas? When it rained he could not cover it, and when it did not rain it did not need a cover. If we do not fortify the canal in time of peace in war we can not, and in peace we do not need it. That is the argument. There is only one time to fortify it, and that is now, at this time, in connection with its construction.

I tell you that the American people's unanimity, so graphically depicted by the chairman of the committee with reference to opposition and delay, is equally magnificent and resonant with reference to the fortifications of the canal. I tell you this is a question that should eliminate any partisan cry in the hearts of American patriots. Every man who is a patriot, in my judgment, in this broad land is going to write somebody down in the back of his book for a blackball at the ballot box hereafter who votes against the fortification of this canal as it is constructed.

I am free to confess that I had rather be censured as a new was trying to defeat the canal, to advocate what I believed the people wanted and what I knew was right.

This bill ought to bear a specific and clear amendment commanding the Secretary of War to fortify this canal sufficient to control it against the fleet of any hostile foe in time of war. These simple words could be affixed and would be sustained, and ought to be, by every patriot in the land. [Applause.]

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I supposed when we started this discussion that there would be no difference of opinion as to the better route. We have been clamoring for an isthmian canal persistently through the influence of this Government, and especially since 1872. There never has been a time until now when it was possible to build a canal by the American Government. A was possible to build a canal by the American Government. A half a century ago the idea of spending $200,000,000 on this waterway would have been impossible. Not only that, but one decade ago, two decades ago, if we had had the money, it would have been utterly impossible to get an American Congress to consent that the Government of the United States might build and own a most interconsistence. great interoceanic canal.

The idea at that time of individualism was so great, and the fear of paternalism so great, that it was impossible; but now we are all agreed that the Government of the United States should build this canal. We are all agreed that the Government should own and operate the canal. The only question at issue seems to be whether we shall take one route or the other. And the argument of our friends seem to hinge more upon the question of construction, what the cost may be, rather than the proper place for

Our friends seem to think that this bill ought to be discouraged as a mere nucleus for dickering with other governments. If we have no choice among ourselves as to where this canal should be, if our friends would as leave have the Panama route as the Nicaragua route, then it is very well to put in these amendments and to insist upon their passage. But if you or if I have a conviction that if we are to have a canal it must be over one route or the other, then it seems to me that we should be ready to vote now for our choice.

It is not true, as I gather from this report, that there is any doubt in the mind of this Commission as to which route would be better for the people of the United States. It is true the Commission, acting for the great American people, all of whom think, is careful to give the advantages of one and the advantages of the other; but in summing up, the Commission has declared a decided preference for the Nicaragua route. It has given reasons, and numerous ones, why the Nicaragua route should be taken at all events. And the mere fact that this Commission stated that by reason of the large figure asked for the Panama route it was out of the question signifies, in my judgment, very little.

The Commission practically answers every objection made here.

It has told us that while the Nicaragua route is longer, yet from the eastern ports of the United States, in our commerce both with Asia and the Pacific slope, there would be a saving on the round trip of two days. The Commission tells us that as to our commerce from the Gulf ports on every round trip there would

We know, everybody who thinks knows, that we are now in the dawn of, on the great Pacific seas, the greatest commercial strife that ever has occurred since the world began. We also recognize that upon or near the Pacific is quite a third of the population of the entire globe.

A few years ago Japan, one of the peoples of the farther Pacific, awoke to the possibilities of the human race. Then it had a for-eign commerce of only about $30,000,000 per annum, or equal to eign commerce of only about $30,000,000 per annum, or equal to $1 per capita. But having awakened to a realization of its possibilities it has in the short space of time built up a foreign commerce of over $200,000,000, or, in other words, its commerce has risen from $1 to $7 per capita. Everyone believes that the time is near when China will have an awakening which will increase her commerce from less than $1 per capita to from $3 to $5 at least. There will be a strife for this commerce such as was never before seen.

What position, then, do the people of the United States desire to occupy relative to the great Pacific Ocean? Do we desire to go hundreds of miles farther south? Do we desire to go hundreds of miles nearer our competitors and dig the Panama Canal, and say to Europe, "We are digging a canal equally for your benefit, for all of our competitors, and therefore we are unselfish," or shall we say logically that we want a canal primarily for Americans? If we do we should have a choice; and our choice must be the Nicaragua route, whatever the cost may be.

I am free to confess that I had rather be censured as a new member for attempting to suggest to a great committee and the leaders in Congress than to be censured by the American people whose representative I am, and to feel that I was afraid on this floor, for fear that somebody would laugh at me, and say that I the question of time, the question of space, might measure our power to control our rightful proportion of this great commerce.

Our Commission was not oblivious to this consideration. It has

Our Commission was not oblivious to this consideration. It has guarded itself all along the line by saying that the Nicaragua Canal is altogether feasible; that it is longer, that the curvature is greater, but invariably says our ships can make a voyage from the eastern ports through Nicaragua one day quicker than through the Panama, and from the Gulf ports two days would be saved by the Nicaragua route. The fuel bills alone for the additional time required to swing around through the Panama Canal on our trade between the Atlantic and Parific would be enormous during trade between the Atlantic and Pacific would be enormous during the year, and if we shall get our proportion of the $1,500,000,000 foreign commerce that must soon be built in the Orient, four days' extra coal on every round trip through Panama from Gulf ports, and two days' extra coal on each round trip from our eastern ports around through the Panama would at the end of the year run into millions of useless expenditure and a great waste of

That Commission finds that for our commerce the Panama Canal would not be beneficial in a single field except on the western coast of South America. What does that commerce amount It is but a trifle at best, compared with our whole commerce. The Commission shows that if the Panama Canal were built it would encourage no interior trade in that part of the country. The Panama Railroad has never built up a commerce there except for the conveniences of working on the canal and the conveniences for the operation of the railroad.

What does the Commission say about the Nicaragua Canal? It says that if that canal were built there would be a great commerce built up between this country and the interior of that portion of South America. It shows the benefit there all along the line in favor of the Nicaragua route, with the single exception of the shortage of distance and some little advantages in construction and maintainance. Is that what we are looking for? Is it a question as to where we can build a canal at the least cost that we are trying to solve? No; the pertinent question is, What canal will furnish the best outlet for the great commerce that is to come from the Gulf, the great commerce that is to come from the East, the great commerce that is to come from the West back to the East?

It is this that we are looking for to-day; and when we take the report of the Commission and read it, we find that there is no question between these two routes as to their feasibility and desirability for our domestic or foreign trade. The Panama makes a canal for the world and benefits our competitors more even than it does the American people. The Nicaragua route would be our highway right at our doors on the Atlantic and on the Pacific, and our competitors would have to come by our doors instead of our meeting them halfway.

Now, there is one thing that is unquestionably true: The greatest commerce that is to grow up for the benefit of the American people anywhere on earth is going to be the commerce between the different portions of our own country. There is no doubt that the people of the United States are going to be more surprised at the development of the western portion of this continent than they will be at the development in the Orient or elsewhere. If the waters of the great western lakes and rivers are distributed, there will be a producing country on the western portion of this country that will unquestionably surpass anything known to man. That part of the country can never expect to become a manufacturing center in the general lines. The people there must be essentially producers from the soil of high-priced crops, such as sugar beets, fancy fruit, etc.

There are thousands of impediments to their coming forward the country in ground manufacturing but in helf as a competitor in general manufacturing, but in half a century more the western part of this country will astound the world with its field products. This will make a commerce between the Gulf and the Eastern States that will probably surpass anything we shall ever see in any other country. Therefore the Nicaragua route for this commerce seems to me to be so much superior to the Panama route that there is hardly room for serious contention. Again, we now have an opportunity to build the Nicaragua Canal. The preliminaries are settled. The money is Nicaragua Canal.

in the Treasury.

What is this opportunity worth? It may be incalculable. Who knows what effect the dickering delay necessary to advance the Panama to this stage may cost us?

We have the revenues to pay for the canal as we build it. unquestionably have the concessions, we have the spirit, the people of the United States are a unit, and we are ready to proceed with the building of the canal on the Nicaragua route. And why should we be checked? You say to investigate and negotiate for another route, to see if we can not build another cheaper. I deny that this is pertinent. It is the best and not the cheapest we want. The location makes the Nicaragua our route and our people should be satisfied with nothing less.

Mr. COONEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire that the Clerk shall read the document I send to the desk as a part of my remarks. The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 242) to repeal the treaty between the Governments of the United States and Great Britain commonly called the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

of the United States and Great Britain commonly called the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

Whereas the Governments of the United States and Great Britain did, on the 19th day of April, 1850, enter into a treaty, commonly called the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, for the purpose of facilitating and aiding the construction of a ship canal between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans by the way of the River San Juan de Nicaragua and either or both of the lakes of the Nicaragua or Managua to any port or place on the Pacific Ocean, and to jointly control and protect the use thereof; and

Whereas although a half century has elapsed since said treaty was made, no canal connecting said oceans has been built, but the changed conditions of population, of commerce, and of said Governments, while grievously increasing the necessity for, have rendered said treaty a barrier to the successful construction and operation of any ship canal between said oceans; and Whereas it is the expressed desire and purpose of the people of the United States, through their Government, to immediately construct, own, and operate a ship canal connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans independently of any European power, and that this Government, recognizing its disposition and ability to control such canal on the broadest principles of liberality and justice toward all nations and peoples, can not be strengthened or made more secure by compulsory treaties with European nations. Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States is authorized and directed to notify the Government of Great Britain of the desire and purpose of this Government to construct a ship canal across the Isthmus of Panama, connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and to negotiate with said Government of Great Britain for the mutual and absolute abrogation of all the unexecuted parts of the treaty made between said Governments the 19th of April, 1850, relative to the construction of a

Mr. COONEY. Mr. Chairman, it has only been a year and a half since I had the honor of introducing the joint resolution just read. I now have the pleasure of congratulating the House on the fact that the provisions of that resolution have become the law of the land, and that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is abrogated and repealed. This is the removal of an obstacle from an isthmian canal that required more skillful engineering than will the building of the dam across the San Juan at Boca San Carlos.

The Clayton-Bulwer treaty was the mountain that has heretofore blocked the pathway of any canal. It could not be dug around, nor cut through, nor tunneled under; but this resolution, acting as efficiently and quietly as the ancient mustard seed of faith, has removed the mountain and now gives to those who through sunshine and tempest have labored for this canal their first enraptured and unobstructed vision of its shimmering stream running through Nicaragua from ocean to ocean. That pathetic scene of tumultuous joy described by Zenaphon, when, after marching through every hardship and danger, his men fell into each others embrace and wept tears of joy on each others necks as at last they beheld the sea which assured them they were near home was never equaled until the honorable gentleman who reported the pending bill and the distinguished statesman and Senator from Alabama met and in each others arms contem-plated the wreck of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. With them we all rejoice in the event.

The American people had been taught for the last forty years by orator, politician, and pamphleteer that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty had been forced upon them when the nation was young and weak, and no amount of historical facts or moral reasoning could prevail against that impression. The first Hay-Pauncefots treaty was obnoxious more from the fact that it was but an amendment of the former treaty than that it expressly prohibited the fortification of the canal after we had built it. The last treaty which has been recently confirmed and made law gracefully recognizes and submits to the prevailing public opinion of this country by abrogating and repealing the Clayton-Bulwer treaty by the substitution of a wholly new and independent treaty by which we have gained substantial advantages and Great Britain has not lost a single one. Indeed it must be conceded that until that indefinite period in the future arrives when our foreign shipping shall dominate the commerce of the world Great Britain will receive the chief advantages. Of foreign shipments entered at the ports of this country alone it is estimated that Great Britain carries 57 per cent, the United States 20 per cent, and other foreign countries 23 per cent.

The merchant marine engaged in the world's commerce is estimated. Creat Britain 60 per cent, the United States 5 per cent.

The merchant marine engaged in the world's commerce is estimated: Great Britain, 60 per cent; the United States, 5 per cent, and all other countries, 35 per cent. It will be evident from this that the direct benefits to the shipping interests of Great Britain and the United States by the building of the canal may be conservatively estimated as 90 to 10. The additional fact that we are to build, police, and maintain the canal at our own expense enhances the value of its advantages to Great Britain. Wherein hances the value of its advantages to Great Britain. Wherein Great Britain has lost anything or given us anything in this whole affair I am at a loss to comprehend. We have the advantage of a canal that may stimulate an American merchant marine, but that is a purely speculative advantage for which we propose to pay every dollar it is worth. Our chief and substantial advantage is in the amicable and just settlement of a dangerous subject between two powerful and great peoples in relieving the public mind from responsibility to an obnoxious treaty and permitting us to enter untrammeled upon the execution of one of the greatest achievements ever undertaken by man, wise or unwise, profitable or unprofitable, as it may be, but certainly one upon which the American people have fastened their hearts.

By the provisions of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty the canal is to be open to all nations and people at all times for the same tolls and under the same rules of use and navigation. No privilege or advantage is to be given to an American vessel over those of any other nation; nor is there any right granted to us to fortify it or make it in any manner an instrument of war. That is right; and it is with that understanding that I shall vote for this bill. When this or a similar bill was pending in this House a year and a half ago I used every argument I could to defeat it. My hostility, however, did not spring from the neutrality of the canal, but from the belief that it was unwise to undertake the task while the provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty were in force. I believe in the absolute neutrality of the canal. The Isthmus bears such a relation to commerce that all the world is interested in it. If the governments through which the proposed canal is to run were to build it themselves the world would force its neutralization, or we would undertake that task ourselves.

The element of war, either present or prospective, should not enter into the calculations of the American people in this great project. Anything less than a neutral canal would only invite the attack of the world and render it an instrument of war rather than of peace and commerce. If it is not built upon the principle of equality to all nations, I would rather see it fail entirely than see the United States lose her proud position as chief among nations in their onward march to civilization, justice, and amity among all mankind. We now have a great statue of Liberty Enlightening the World in the harbor of New York. When we build this canal let us erect the statue of Justice in the harbor at one end and the statue of Peace in the harbor at the other end of it, and dedicate it to the world as an earnest of our good will to all.

The best route for a canal across the Isthmus is a subject that has been discussed upon meager information for the past fifty years. Attention has been called to at least a half a dozen different routes as practicable; but the recent thorough and elaborate reports of the Isthmian Canal Commission have eliminated from consideration all routes but the two known as the Nicaraguan and Panama. The Nicaragua route has been the prime favorite in American public opinion. It is nearest to us. It has been the only feasible route open to us. The Panama route has been occupied, worked, and owned by a foreign company. It could not be made an American canal because we could not control it. We have therefore never considered it in our calculation. The reason why so many members of this House declare now that they have always favored the Nicaragua route and opposed the Panama is very plain. They had no other route to favor, and the Panama is very plain. They had no other route to favor, and the Panama is very plain. They had no other route to favor, and the Panama is very plain. THE NICARAGUA ROUTE.

The report says that the difficulties disclosed and likely to be encountered in the construction of dams are less at Conchuda on the Nicaragua line than at Bohio on the Panama line, but both dams are practicable.

The Nicaragua route is located nearest to us, and for the commerce in which the United States is most interested, that between our Atlantic and Pacific ports, European and American ports, it is shorter by one day's sailing, while for our Gulf ports it is two days shorter.

It is the best route for sailing vessels on account of the uncertain winds in the Bay of Panama; but this is not material, as the steamship is rapidly displacing the sail ship.

The local health conditions for construction is better than on the Panama, although no less effective sanitary measures must be taken in the one case than in the other.

THE PANAMA ROUTE.

It says of the Panama route that the regulation of the level and overflow of the waters of Lake Bohio, on the Panama line, is more simple and easy than that of Lake Nicaragua.

The summit of Panama is 28 feet less, the locks necessarily fewer, and the lift for vessels less.

The curvature, which in a narrow channel like that of a canal, is of great importance to large ships and the preservation of the banks and channel, is most favorable on the Panama. Its curves are far less in number and of much greater radius.

The Panama is 49 miles long, but 134 miles shorter than the Nicaragua route. It will take twelve hours to go through the Panama, thirty-three hours to go through the Nicaragua route. As the passage must be done in daylight, it practically means one day for the Panama and three days for the other. If a system of lighting by hydraulic force from the dams be adopted to facilitate navigation by night, as is intimated by the report, it is evident that it can be applied to the shortest route with best success.

That, after completed, the Panama Canal can be maintained and operated for $1,300,000 less annually than the Nicaragua

That is practically the comparison of advantages of both routes which the Commission has given us.

It gives us other facts which may or may not be considered as exclusive and natural advantages to either route, but which are pertinent to the consideration of this subject, and to which I desire briefly to call the attention of the House:

The Commission is satisfied that the water-supply features on both lines are satisfactory. That the Panama is partially constructed, estimated by some at two-fifths of the whole line. It has a railroad in operation the full length of the route, buildings, machinery, and accommodations for labor. It has good natural harbors on the seacoasts at each terminus of the line. All of these things are yet to be built and made on the Nicaragua route. It has no railroad with which to carry on construction, nor has it a harbor at either end. There was once a good harbor at Greytown—its eastern terminus—but the blowing sands have filled it up and destroyed it, and, in the estimation of many excellent engineers, it is impossible to reopen and maintain a harbor there

The Panama is so far under construction as to justify the plan of engineering upon which it now rests, and has by actual experience developed the difficulties that are to be met on that route. The latent difficulties, which always come as surprises in the most scientifically laid plan, are yet to be developed on the Nicaragua line. Before work could be commenced by our Government on either route the right of way has to be obtained and special treaties secured by the United States from the governments through which the canal is to pass. The Commission made a careful examination of the Panama route, the work completed, and entered into correspondence with the Panama Canal Company concerning its purchase. That company asked one hundred and nine or ten millions for its canal, railroad machinery, equipments, and franchises. The Commission has estimated their value at $40,000,000, and the cost of completing the canal at $144,233,358, making the total cost of the Panama Canal $184,233,358. The estimated cost of the Nicaraguan Canal is placed at $189,864,062.

Such is the information gathered by the Commission on this subject and developed by its report for our use. On such facts the Commission winds up its report with the following judgment on the two routes:

There are certain physical advantages, such as a shorter canal line, a more complete knowledge of the country through which it passes, and lower costs of maintenance and operation in favor of the Panama route, but the price fixed by the Panama Canal Company for a sale of its property and franchises is so unreasonable that its acceptance can not be recommended by this Commission. After considering all the facts developed by the investigations made by the Commission and the actual situation as it now stands, and having in view the terms offered by the New Panama Canal Company, this Commission is of the opinion that "the most practicable and feasible route" for an isthmian canal, to be "under the control, management, and ownership of the United States," is that known as the Nicaragua route.

Thus we have presented to us a report which practically finds all the chief and salient points in favor of one route, but decides in favor of the other. There could be no other decision. The price fixed by the Panama Company was equivalent to withdrawing its route from the decision of the Commission and leaving the Nicaraguan, whether desirable or undesirable, the sole and only route for its recommendation. It is evident, from the protracted period that the Canal Commission has held its report open to revision and the efforts it has made to induce the Panama Company to offer its route for $40,000,000, that had such offer been made, the Commission's decision would have been for the Panama route. As the report now stands it is not conclusive as to either route. It practically declares that the Panama is the superior route, but that on account of the unreasonable price placed upon it by its owners we will have to put up with the Nicaragua route.

Sir, strong as is American sentiment to build and own an isthmian canal, strong as has been its attachment and prejudices to the Nicaragua route, nothing less than the best canal that can be built across the Isthmus will ever satisfy the American people. It is now well known that the Panama Company is knocking at the doors of Congress ready and willing to sell its route, property, and franchises for the sum of $40,000,000, the value placed upon it by our own Commission. The pending bill, which irrevocably commits us to the Nicaragua route, should be amended so that the changed condition of the Panama proposition may be considered in the final settlement of this question either by Congress or by the President, whose duty it will be to carry its legislation into effect. I shall vote for the bill now pending; but I shall vote for it with the opinion entertained by a very large minority of this it with the opinion entertained by a very large minority of this House that the Panama is the preferable route.

It is 134 miles the shortest route. Its passage will be easier and from three to four times less in duration.

It presents no greater obstacle to construction than Nicaragua. has good natural harbors at each terminus of the line.

It has the best level.

Its difficulties have been developed by actual labor all along its line, and the estimate of its cost on that account must be much more certain than on the long and undeveloped line of Nicaragua.

It can be built and put in operation sooner.

When built, the expense of operating and maintaining it will be $1,300,000 less annually than the Nicaragua route. This item is of prime importance, as it is perpetual. It represents a saving annually of 2 per cent (Government interest) on a capital of $65,000,000. If we take this difference into the computation of what the canals will cost us to construct, as we can with reason, it means that we can purchase the Panama Company's line and complete it for $184,233,258 and the Nicaragua for $254,864,062, which makes a difference of $70,480,704 that we will save in selecting the Panama route.

These are all facts adduced from the Commission's report and which can not be ignored by those who are in search of the best canal by charges of obstruction and delay coming from those who are eager to build any canal. There has been no delay of this subject heretofore that has not resulted in clearing its pathway of grave obstacles and bringing us much nearer to the realization of such a canal as would be acceptable to the people than any of such a canal as would be acceptable to the people than any these gentlemen have attempted to force through Congress by premature legislation. The undertaking is one of the most stupendous ever attempted by man. It is to stand as a symbol of the power, greatness, and beneficence of this Republic, and we can afford to be patient as well as brave and eager in laying its foundations so that the completed result shall bear the resemblance of American spirit.

If it is not possible to amend this bill to satisfy my views I shall vote for it as it is; I shall vote for it because I believe in an shall vote for it as it is; I shall vote for it because I believe in an isthmian canal owned by this Government; I shall vote for it because the time has come when public thought should be turned from war and its aggressions to the objects of commerce and peace. While we are in a condition of war and the military spirit is rampant the principles of the Republic are in constant danger; but in great enterprises conducted for the peace and welfare of all men those principles are strengthened. Let us raise an army of laboring men to offset our army of soldiers, and let us set the canal against our Philippine war and divide the revenues of the Govern against our Philippine war and divide the revenues of the Govern-

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee having this bill in charge [Mr. Hepburn] has called our attention to the fact that the project of cutting an isthmian canal is at least four hundred years old; and in our own short experience we know that for a number of years surveys without number, as the chairman of the committee stated, and reports and literature upon the subject of the Panama and Nicaragua canals have filled countless pages of the RECORD of the two Houses of Congress. comes in here now, in the face of a possibility of a proposition more favorable to the interests of the country than the one contained in this bill, and asks us offhand, without delay, without proper delib-eration, to adopt the scheme of the Nicaragua Canal. For myself, I feel that the interests of this country are of more importance than the mere success of the committee which the gentleman represents in getting this bill through to final passage.

When I consider the fact that the initial cost of the Nicaragua Canal is over $10,000,000 more than would be required for the completion of the Panama route, and that the expense of annual maintenance after the canal shall have been built is $1,300,000 maintenance after the canal shall have been built is $1,300,000 more for the Nicaragua than the Panama Canal, it seems to me that it is the proper duty of this House to go slowly in adopting this proposition, and with that feeling I shall support and vote for the Morris proposition. I have read the report of this Commission. I look upon it as the most valuable document that has ever been presented by any man or by any person for the consideration of Congress and the country, and I am perfectly willing to draw the reasons for my vote in support of the Morris amendment from the reasons given in this report, not merely on one, but from all the conclusions and findings of this Commission.

Let us glance briefly at some of the statements in the last chapter of this report. This Commission says the Panama route is alone feasible for a sea-level canal. We are not building this canal for to-day or for to-morrow, but for the years and the centuries that are to come. As I look forward into the future, I think it is not an unreasonable hope that the day will ultimately come when, with advanced scientific and engineering methods, there may be a tide-water canal at Panama. This Commission says that the time required to complete a sea-level canal on the Panama route is probably more than twice that needed to build a canal with locks, which excludes it from favorable consideration aside from other serious obstructions of its construction. They have set out what those serious obstructions were, and yet when we look at the objections to a tide-water canal at Panama and consider the advances that have been made in the last fifty years in engineering, it is not unreasonable to anticipate that be-fore this canal shall have been many years in operation means will be found to convert the canal at Panama, if it shall be built, into a tide-water or sea-level canal. That is altogether impossible with the Nicaraguan route.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Is it possible that the canal being contemplated now at Panama can be made a sea-level canal?

Does the gentleman think it is possible?

Mr. BROMWELL. I most certainly do. Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Has any engineer expressed such an opinion?

Mr. BROMWELL. I have no doubt competent engineers have, and this very Commission said that the Panama route is feasible as a tide-water canal; but there are serious obstructions to be overcome.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Nicaraguan Canal will never be feasible as a sea-level canal. So much for that comparison. Let us go on further down in the same page. Comparing the water supply of the two routes, the Commission say that for either route an unlimited supply of water can be furnished by the plans proposed. Next, speaking of the system of regulation of the supply of water, the system of regulation at Lake Bohio—consists only of the discharge of water over the crest of a weir, as the lake level rises under the influence of floods in the Chagres River. The plan of regulating the level of Lake Nicaragua is less simple, though perfectly practicable. It involves the operation of movable gates at such times and to such an extent as the rainfall on the lake may require. The experience and judgment of the operator are essential elements in the effective regulation of this lake. The regulation of Lake Bohio is automatic.

Then, there are the advantages as to the railroad. Absolutely little or nothing has been done in the way of railroad facilities on the Nicaragua Canal, while the Commission say:

The railroad on the Panama route would be of great value during the period of preparation of harbor construction, and should materially shorten that period. A well-equipped railroad is in operation the entire length of the Panama route, and existing conditions there afford immediate accommodations for a large force of laborers.

Then as to the harbors. There are two harbors on the Panama Then as to the harbors. There are two harbors on the Panama route ready for use. There are two harbors to be made against great difficulties and requiring great skill and expenditures for the Nicaragua route. The annual estimate of the cost of maintaining and operating the Nicaragua Canal is $1,300,000 greater than the corresponding charges of the Panama Canal. It is true in this day of prosperity, when our Treasury is bursting with the money accumulated there, $1,300,000 is not a great matter for us to consider, but it is in the memory of all, and not so many years ago, either, that $1,300,000 taken out of the Treasury more than necessary would have worked great hardship upon the country; and sary would have worked great hardship upon the country; and remember that this is a continuing expense for all time. Then remember that this is a continuing expense for all time. Then they speak of the difference in the distance and length. I desire to call your attention to this part of the report because the ele-ment of safety has been referred to by several gentlemen in this debate.

These periods-

Referring to the length of time of going through the canal-are practically the measure of the relative advantages of the two canals as waterways connecting the two oceans, but not entirely, because the risk to vessels and the dangers of delay are greater in a canal than in the open sea.

In other words, the ratio of danger to vessels does not follow the length of the two routes, but the longer the canal the greater will be the ratio of danger.

They say that the Nicaragua route will be the more favorable one for sailing vessels because of the uncertain winds in the Bay of Panama. This is not, however, material matter, as sailing ships are being rapidly displaced by steamships.

I allude to that because the chairman of the committee vesterday, in answer to an inquiry upon that point, made the statement that there had been a great increase in sailing vessels compared with steam vessels. I took the trouble to investigate that in the Report of the Commissioner of Navigation for the current year, and I find the following facts:

	1900.		1901.
	Number.	Tonnage.	Number.	Tonnage.
Sail: Wood Steel Steam:	494	87,557	514	104,419
	10	28,903	12	21,746
Wood	342	34,580	405	37,463
Iron and steel	80	167,948	101	236,128

At the present rate of decline sail tonnage will have wholly disappeared in twenty years.

This shows conclusively, and as stated in one of the reports, that the sailing vessels are going out of existence.

Now, I want to call your attention to a comparison made by General Abbott, a retired brigadier-general of the United States Army, one of the engineer officers who is actively and intimately connected as a consulting engineer with the Panama route. He has arranged the advantages of the two routes in the shape of deadly parallel columns. It is as follows:

PANAMA.

Two good harbors now existing.

A good railroad now existing along the entire route.

Actual construction now well advanced (about two-fifths entire length actually completed) and remaining difficulties accurately known.

No constructions projected which are not justified by recognized engineer-ing practice.

Except the works at Bohio, no difficult excavations or constructions to be made where the annual rainfall exceeds 98 inches (only about 50 per cent more than on our Gulf coast).

Route lies wholly in Colombia, where all interests will be benefited by the

Two harbors to be created, one of them (Greytown) presenting unusual natural difficulties.

A long and difficult railroad to be constructed, which General Hains considers should extend along all the route, except the lake portion, i. e., for a distance of 120 miles.

Practically nothing done in way of construction and many of the essential elements undecided.

One or two dams projected wholly without precedent in canal work, and many embankments which must be permanent elements of danger. The most difficult works lie in a The most difficult works lie in a region where the observations of the canal company indicate the annual rainfall to be nearly 22 feet (256 inches), or nearly three times as much as at the Panama site.

Route lies on the border of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, where local jealousy already exists, which may prejudice the interests of the canal.

Distance to be lighted and supervised when the canal is completed, 176 miles, or nearly four times as great as the Panama.

as the Panama.

Active volcances near route; one, Omotepe, on an island in Lake Nicaragua, and another, Onose, only about 40 miles from the locks. An earthquake on April 29, 1898, at Leon, destroyed several buildings.

Cost estimated by the Government Commission, on data recognized as wholly insufficient, at about $133,000,000.

Concessions from Nicaragua and Costa Rica (upon which whole un-dertaking is based) either expired, or expire next year, and officially declared by Nicaragua to be for-feited and void.

But let us assume that both canals are constructed and open to navigation, and then compare the two routes by considering which of them would undoubtedly be selected by vessels seeking to cross the Isthmus. This is a crucial test which will reveal their relative merits:

PANAMA. NICARAGUA

Summit level probably 103 feet, and perhaps only 66 feet.

Locks double from the opening of the canal, one chamber 738 by 82 feet, and the other 738 by 95 feet, with intermediate gates.

Curvature genile. Smallest radius 8,200 feet. Of the 46 miles 264 are straight and 15 have radii equal to or exceeding 9,850 feet.

No troublesome winds or river currents to be encountered, even in times of flood.

Ports both known to be good and easy of access.

Both ports artificial, to which access may be doubtful, especially on Atlantic side.

Length of route 46 miles, and time of transit fourteen hours.

Both ports artificial, to which access may be doubtful, especially on Atlantic side.

Length of route 176 miles, and time of transit not less than forty-four Summit level 110 feet.

Locks single (subsequently to have another chamber added); dimen-sions 350 by 80 feet.

Curvature too sharp. Smallest radius in canal proper 4,000 feet. For 68 miles the route traverses the San Juan River, where, to gain 47‡ miles as a bird flies, it is necessary to travel 67‡ miles—a loss of 43 per cent.

Heavy trade winds and strong river currents.

Taking, therefore, the conclusions of the Commission and the above comparison of General Abbot, it looks to me as if good business judgment would require us to act slowly in irrevocably committing ourselves to the proposition in this bill. I am in favor of an isthmian canal, and I am opposed to any unnecessary delay in constructing it. But let us not take the initial step until we are thoroughly satisfied as to which is the route that will be better for the country. In the language of Davy Crockett, let us be sure we are right and then go ahead.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with much interest to the remarks concerning the canal over the Isthmus of Darien and the proposed Nicaragua Canal. I have visited both sites. I was in Nicaragua with Walker—not Admiral Walker, but William Walker. This was in 1857. I thought at that time it would be a good place for a Government canal; and if there had been a carel than I should have get and of Nicaragua. had been a canal then I should have got out of Nicaragua a great deal quicker and more comfortably than I did get out. [Laughter.]

As to the Panama route, Mr. Chairman, let us examine it and ascertain what we are expected to pay and what we are to get in return. They want $40,000,000 for the work already done. Well, how much has been done? One-quarter of the whole. Forty million dollars for a quarter. Now, if we take the other three quarters and pay for the work at the rate the French have paid for the ters and pay for the work at the rate the French have paid for the quarter we can begin to ascertain what the canal will cost. The French paid at least $240,000,000 as the work stands to-day. We will pay, at the same ratio, for the other three-quarters $720,000,000. Seven hundred and twenty million dollars plus $40,000,000 will make $760,000,000. Allowing that the French company stole half of the subscriptions to the capital, the work already done has really cost $120,000,000. At this rate, if we are honest and don't steal, it will cost us three times $120,000,000, or $360,000,000 plus the $40,000,000 that we pay, or $400,000,000 in all. [Laughter.] Admiral Walker estimates that the Nicaragua Canal can be built for $190,000,000. By following his advice we would save for $190,000,000. By following his advice we would save $210,000,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is a little too much money to pay for the privilege of building a canal over the Isthmus of Darien and completing a work which the French have given up. General Grant once said that you would bury 100 dead men for every sleeper you put into a Panama railroad. If this is so, how many lives would it take to complete this Panama Canal? Bear in mind that lives are more valuable than money.

What do we get if we pay this money? Why, we have to go to the United States of Colombia and buy the right of way. You can set the girl to dig putil you get this part the girl to dig putil you get this part the girl to the control of the cont can not begin to dig until you get this right of way. You say you do not know what Nicaragua will charge or what Costa Rica will charge for a right of way. Well, do you know what the United States of Colombia will charge? You will have more trouble in Colombia than in Nicaragua or Costa Rica. Why, within three months United States trous and marines have been leaded along. months United States troops and marines have been landed along that French canal to save the United States mails and prevent insurgents from tearing up the French railroad.

In addition to this, what do you get, Mr. Chairman? If you settle with the stockholders of the original Panama Canal—those who were robbed by the De Lesseps gang—a hundred years from now, when we are all dead and this Chamber filled with possibly an improved set of Congressmen, they will be discussing the French canal claims the same as we to-day are discussing the French spoliation claims. [Laughter.] It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn], who has given so much thought and time to the subject, ought to know more about it than those who are advocating the Panama route from superficial knowledge.

I trust the gentleman from Iowa. I know he is a man of thought, of energy, of capability, of honesty—a man who can not be bought nor swerved in any way. After his six years of careful work upon this problem I would rather trust him than trust the engineer alluded to by my friend from Connecticut [Mr. Hill], who acknowledges he has already had his fingers in the French

Mr. Chairman, viewing this question in the light of common sense, we ought to vote for the Nicaragua route. If we wished to place ourselves in the position of the old Corps Législatif in France under the De Lesseps régime, we might vote for the Panama route and be under the same suspicions attending that Corps Législatif. Those suspicions became more than suspicions. They were proved. I hope no such suspicions concerning an American Congress will ever be raised, and if raised will prove to be unfounded. I have said all that I want to say. [Applause.]

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, if it were not for the recent action of the Panama Company I do not believe the recent action of the panama Company I do not believe the recent action. there would be a word or a vote in this House against the bill reported by the committee. But it seems to me the action of that company has presented to us an entirely new problem. Until now the question was, Shall we build the canal? To-day a new question is presented, Which canal shall we build? That question was never before us in the past; and it seems to me that the somewhat impatient criticism that is made upon those who advocate considering the claims of the Parama Canal is semewhat profess. considering the claims of the Panama Canal is somewhat unfair, considering that for four hundred years the world has been agitating the building of this canal, and considering that it is a project which we think will benefit the world for much more than four hundred years. It seems to me we can stand even a year's delay, if necessary, in order to be sure that when we do build we build aright.

But I do not believe such delay is necessary. I admit, as has been said by the committee, that probably the people of the country desire the Nicaragua Canal. I am sure we have all been in favor of that route in the past. But why? Has not the reason been because that has been for us the only possible route—the American route? The other route has been the French route; and with that preference for our own which is such a characteristic of the American people, which you may call patriotism or selfishness, according as you are an optimist or a pessimist, but which always makes us stand by our own, the people of this country have always preferred the Nicaragua route. We have shouted for Nicaragua and cried down Panama until we have convinced ourselves; and we stood by that as the one and only route, because it was ours. But now suddenly we find that there is another route that may be ours; and I think it is incumbent upon us now to be very certain on such a far-reaching and important measure that we get the right one.

I am not going to discuss the merits of the two routes, but I do not think anyone can read the report of the Commission without feeling that in this opinion, from an engineering point of view, the Panama route is at least as good as the Nicaragua. I confess that there is one fact that influences me in favor of that route, and that is that we are not simply trusting to engineers in regard to what may be accomplished, but that a quarter of the work is already done. That, in my mind, counts for a good deal. At the same time I would not commit myself, with my imperfect knowledge of engineering, in favor of one route or the other, but I prefer that the option should be left open to us.

The gentleman from New York has spoken in regard to the difficulties in obtaining the right of way in Colombia. Can we not get a better right of way if we have the two States, Colombia and Nicaragua, vying with each other? Is there any doubt that and Nicaragua, vying with each other? Is there any doubt that with both States eager for the canal we can get now a satisfactory and favorable treaty from either? Why should we go to Nicaragua, as this bill compels us to do, without any option, and take whatever terms it may give us? Let us be sure that we do not preclude ourselves from choosing the right route. Consequently, I favor the amendment which proposes to leave that option open to the President of the United States, giving him without the propose of the Company to decide authority, under the guidance of the Commission, to decide which route we shall get. I think we ought to put this matter in such a shape that we shall not be committed finally to one route when the question of a decision between the two has only just when the duestion of a decision between the two has only just been brought before us. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose, when the time comes, to vote for this bill. I was one of the 30 who, during the last session, took occasion to vote against a bill similar to this in character. On this occasion to vote against a bill similar to this in character. On this occasion, however, the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Morris] includes what I think is the business proposition connected with this measure. I shall support that amendment. If it fails, I propose to vote for the bill.

This amendment provides in substance that if the Panama Canal, so far as constructed, with all the interests and rights which any corporation or individual may have therein, can be $40,000,000, and equally as desirable political and territorial rights can be secured at no greater expense than in case of the Nicaragua route, then the President is authorized, on the recommendation of the Isthmian Canal Commission, or a majority thereof, to purchase the Panama Canal and property and construct a canal at that place. If the purchase is not made and the necessary negotiations are not completed within six months from the passage of the act, the amendment becomes inoperative, and the Nicaragua Canal is to be built.

I wish to say a very few things about some of the salient features suggested by the Commission in its conclusions. I agree entirely with the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] in entirely with the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cummings] in the confidence he has in the great judgment and ability and experience of the gentleman from Iowa who has charge of this measure; but I place more confidence in the judgment of this Commission, composed of men of experience and ability, who have devoted their lives to business of this character, who have visited the spot and made their personal investigations. That is my first reason. My second reason is that they are indorsed unqualifiedly by the gentleman from Iowa himself in all their conclusions and deductions. His committee in its report calls special attention to "the valuable report of the Commission."

Now, very briefly, let me call attention to the salient features

Now, very briefly, let me call attention to the salient features involved in these two measures, with the suggestions made by this Commission.

First, after referring to the fact that their investigation has disclosed that the selection of the most feasible and practicable route for an isthmian canal must be made between the Nicaragua and the Panama location, it says with reference to the necessary

So far as the practical operation of a ship canal is concerned, therefore, the water-supply features of both lines are satisfactory.

The next proposition involved is the matter of design and construction of the dams in the case of both routes, and upon that point the Commission says:

The advantages in the design and construction of the dams are in favor of the Nicaragua route.

The next thing involved is the question of transportation be-tween the two termini during the construction of the work in the case of each route, and upon that point the Commission says: A well-equipped railroad is in operation along the entire length of the Panama route, and existing conditions therefore afford immediate accommodation for a large force of laborers.

The next question is that of terminal facilities in connection with both these routes, and upon that point the Commission says:

The completion of the harbors as planned for both routes would yield but little advantage to either; but the balance of advantages, including those of maintenance and operation, is probably in favor of the Panama route.

The next question is the time required for preliminary investigation and preparation for the work, and upon that the Commission savs:

This period of preparation is estimated at one year in the case of the Panama. In Nicaragua this period is estimated at two years, so as to include also the construction of working harbors and terminal and railroad facilities.

The next question is the completion of the entire work, and upon that point the Commission says:

The completion of the entire work, in connection with Nicaragua, might be expected within six years after its beginning, exclusive of the two years estimated for the period of preparation.

In other words, involving as a practical business operation eight years for the construction of the Nicaraguan Canal. In the case of the Panama it says:

It is estimated that this could be completed-

Referring to the Culebra cut-in eight years, with allowance for ordinary delays, but exclusive of a two-year period for preparation and for unforeseen delays, and that the remainder of the work can be finished within the same period.

In other words, the Panama Canal as a business proposition requires ten years for completion, in the judgment of the Com-

The next proposition is the length of the two routes. The total length of the Nicaragua route from sea to sea is 183.66 miles, while the total length of the Panama route is 49.09 miles, and that makes the Nicaragua route 134.57 miles longer, involving the question of risks and also the question of tolls, as I shall show a little later. The question of risk involves the question of insurance. As the Commission further says, it requires twelve hours for a vessel, as is estimated, to pass through the Panama Canal, while it would require thirty-three hours for the same vessel to pass through the Nicaragua Canal, three times the distance, involving about three times the length of time required for the passage, and involving probably three or four times the amount of marine insurance that a vessel would have to carry in order to go through the Nicaragua Canal as compared with the Panama route.

As to the estimated cost of constructing the canal I rely upon the Commission, and I suggest this to the gentleman from New York. The estimated cost of the Nicaraguan route is "$45,630,704 more than that of completing the Panama Canal, omitting the cost of acquiring the latter property." If the latter property were acquired it would have to be acquired under the Morris amendment at a sum not exceeding $40,000,000. Then the Nicaraguan route will cost in actual outlay $5,630,704 more than the

The estimated annual cost of maintaining and operating the Nicaragua Canal is $1,300,000 greater than the corresponding charges of the Panama Canal. Now, what does that mean? It means a continuous annual charge during the life of the Nicaragua Canal for all time. If we take the estimate of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn]—and I take it, because I think it is well based—when he suggested that we could probably negotiate a loan for a sum necessary for the construction of this canal at a rate perhaps less than 2 per cent, if we take that as the basis of capitalization it means, in effect, an investment in the Nicaragua Canal, when you consider the cost of operation, in excess of the Panama Canal, of $65,000,000. Add that to the increased expense of construction of $5,630,704 and you have an increased cost of the Nicaragua route, as compared with Panama, of $70,630,704 actual investment and practically on the basis capitalization; because when you pay every year $1,300,000 you practically on the passes when you pay every year $1,300,000 you practically on the passes when you pay every year $1,300,000 you practically on the passes when you pay every year $1,300,000 you practically on the passes when you pay every year $1,300,000 you practically on the passes when you pay every year $1,300,000 you practically apply the payon payon practically apply the payon payon payon practically apply the payon payon practically apply the payon talization; because when you pay every year $1,300,000 you practically pay it upon that basis of investment.

Now, gentlemen, in discussing this question, toss millions from hand to hand with all the nonchalance and abandon that some of us are probably in the habit of using when we handle nickels; us are probably in the habit of using when we handle nickels; but in my section of the country a million dollars is an amount that means something, and $70,000,000 mean a great deal. One hundred and ninety millions of dollars mean a great deal. Now, right here I should call the attention of this committee to the fact that the estimate, as made by this Commission, able, intelligent, disinterested, and honest as it, is, is made in the case of the Panama Canal practically upon the basis of an engineering certainty, because the difficulties that are to be met with have practically been disclosed by actual operation there, and at an immense cost been disclosed by actual operation there, and at an immense cost to the people of France, if $250,000,000 have been expended in its construction thus far, as we are told.

But these difficulties have been ascertained. The engineers have gone over the ground. It is disclosed. They can see it. In the Nicaragua route they have made as careful an estimate as possible for engineers to make, but these difficulties are not ascertained; they are not seen. The Commission has not been able to discover them, and unforeseen difficulties may exist vastly more than the Commission has anticipated.

The Commission points this out when it says:

There are certain physical advantages, such as a shorter canal line, a more complete knowledge of the country through which it passes, and the lower cost of maintenance and operation in favor of the Panama route.

Undoubtedly the question of commerce is taken into consideration in the construction of this canal. The Commission says:

For the commerce in which the United States is most interested, that between our Pacific ports and Atlantic ports, European and American, the Nicaragua route is shorter by about one day. The same advantage exists between the Atlantic ports and the Orient. For our Gulf ports the advantage of the Nicaragua route is nearly two days. For commerce between the North Atlantic ports and the coast of South America the Panama route is the shorter by about two days. Between Gulf ports and the west coast of Bouth America the saving is about one day.

Well, now, gentlemen rise here and sneer at the fact that there is commerce to be developed on the west coast of South America. If do not know how any man can estimate where commerce is to be developed by this vast enterprise with absolute certainty with the expenditure of two hundred millions of money. This Commission says in their report that there is nothing along the Nicaragua route now in existence, and every particle of development between shore and shore is purely a conjecture by the Commission. The Commission says:

The Nicaragua route would be the more favorable for sailing vessels because of the uncertain winds of Panama Bay. This is not, however, a material matter, as sailing ships are being rapidly displaced by steamships.

Here I wish to say, and I am glad to say, I agree with my dis-There I wish to say, and I am grad to say, I agree with my distinguished friend from Iowa upon this proposition of sailing ships. There is some reason why I should. He stated that there was some increase in sailing ships, and it is true. Last year an addition was made to the sailing fleet of the United States of about 40,000 tons, and about 35,000 of those tons, or nearly that amount, were built in the district which I have the honor to represent upon this floor. He said, and it is true, that there are two great sixmasters now floating the waters, plowing them in the interests of commerce, and both these six-masters were built in my district one in a town 7 miles from where I live and the other in a town 40 miles from where I live.

There is no seven-master built and afloat on the water yet; but I happen to be personally acquainted with the men who own both the six-masted schooners and the seven-master that is now being built at the Fore Rivers Works in Massachusetts. These two six-masters are the only six-masters that have been built and are afloat. The sailing ships are holding their own to a certain extent in the commerce of the world. My constituents are interested in the question of this canal.

Now, a great deal has been said as to what use commerce will make of this great waterway, provided we build it. When we consider this matter of investment the Nicaragua Canal is to cost $70,000,000 more than the Panama route. If a return on the provent is contemplated it means to the toward about 40 per provent is contemplated it means to the toward about 40 per provent is contemplated. investment is contemplated, it means to that extent about 40 per ent extra charge per ton upon the commerce of the world in case of Nicaragua against Panama. That is a matter of tolls. My people are interested in that proposition, because the people I represent are largely interested in sailing ships.

I wish to go further, and say that in my district lives the firm that owns and controls one of the largest, if not the largest, fleet of sailing vessels that now sails the ocean—Arthur Sewall & Co., of Bath, Mo. so that I have some personal interest in this most.

of Bath, Me .- so that I have some personal interest in this measure, and it makes a great difference to those people who own a fleet of ships that are engaged in carrying the commerce of the world whether they pay a large sum for tolls or a smaller sum.

It makes a great difference to them if they have to pay one sum for marine insurance by reason of the fact of going 183.66 miles by one route or a less sum for marine insurance by reason of coing 40.00 by a shorter route and the sailing ships carry the going 49.09 by a shorter route, and the sailing ships carry the cheap cargoes at low rates in competition with steamships, and a high rate of toll involved in the greater cost and the increased cost of insurance might be prohibitive of the use of the canal.

As to the destruction of life involved in the prosecution of the As to the destruction of the involved in the prosecution of the work by reason of the climate, the Commission says: "Existing conditions indicate hygienic advantages for the Nicaragua route, although it is probable that no less effective sanitary measures must be taken during the construction in the one case than in the other," indicating no material distinction in that respect.

As a result, we have no distinction as to water supply. Advantages in favor of the Nicaragua route are in the matter of design and construction of dams, in distance between Pacific and Atlantic ports, European and American and Atlantic ports and the Orient of about one day and Gulf ports two days, and uncertain winds in the Bay of Panama in case of sailing vessels. On the other hand, the advantages in favor of the Panama route are more desirable harbors and terminal facilities, shorter dis-tance for the transportation of commerce between the North Atlantic ports and the west coast of South America by about two days, and between the Gulf ports and the west coast of South America of about one day, a route 137.57 miles shorter, taking twelve instead of thirty-three hours for passage, involving less risk and a smaller rate of insurance. It will cost less to build it and $1,300,000 a year less to operate and maintain it, resulting in a cheaper rate of toll.

I do not believe in delaying this measure, but I can say this in connection with it, that while I represented this district I have had frequent conferences with men engaged in building, owning, and operating vessels of all classes, and I have never heard from any man in my district a single suggestion that there was any occasion for undue or unusual haste in connection with this proposition. More than that, I will go further and say that I do not remember that any man who is interested in shipping in my dis-trict has even called my attention to the pendency of this measure and urged its passage even at any time.

I do not seek delay, but I think these considerations which I have called to the attention of the committee are important business propositions. There is no such occasion for haste that we should begin at once to build a waterway and complete it at the end of eight years, when by waiting two years longer one that is ap-parently equally, and possibly more, desirable—that fact to be determined by experts—can be completed for practically $70,000,000 less money. That kind of haste, in my humble judgment, tends to make waste of the public money. [Applause.]

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to speak on the merits of this measure at the present time, as I covered the subject in my remarks in the last Congress.

I desire to call attention, however, to some legislation and reports of commissions with the hope of directing, if possible, the vote upon this important subject. The gentleman from Illinois the other day suggested that we should delay thirty days or more in order to take up the proposition made through the newspapers by the Panama people. I desire to read a clause in the act authorizing the appointment of the last Commission, and to call special attention to the report of that Commission are the subject. attention to the report of that Commission upon the subject.

The last act authorized the President to investigate and ascertain what rights, privileges, and franchises, if any, may be held or owned by any corporation, association, or individual, and what work, if any, has been done by such corporation, association, and individual in construction of a canal at either or any of the said routes, and particularly at the so-called Nicaragua and Panama routes, respectively, and likewise to associate in the cost of respectively. routes, respectively, and likewise to ascertain the cost of purchase of all the rights, privileges, and franchises held or owned by such or all the rights, privileges, and franchises held or owned by such corporations, associations, or individuals.

The President was authorized by that act to ascertain what the different organizations or corporations held over these respective routes. The Commission has determined and reported to this House in writing within forty days, and I desire to read briefly for the purpose of calling attention to the report of that Commission because some members seem to have forgotten the facts in the presentation of this presentation of the report of the colling attention of the report of the colling attention of the report of the colling attention of the colling attenti in the presentation of this newspaper report of an offer to sell for $40,000,000.

The Republics of Nicaragua and Costa Rica are untrammeled by any existing concessions or treaty obligations and are free to grant to the United States the rights necessary for the attainment of these ends; and in December, 1900, demonstrated their willingness to have their territory so occupied by the United States by executing protocols by which it was agreed that they would enter into negotiations to settle in detail the plan and agreements necessary to accomplish the construction and provide for the ownership of the proposed canal whenever the President of the United States is authorized by law to acquire the necessary control and authority.

Now, the President of the United States has no authority, except under the Constitution giving him the right to make treaties, to acquire the ownership of land and territory for the construction of a canal over either of these routes. We have, however, two republics here who have eliminated all objections, and are ready and anxious to deal with us for the construction of this highway, and have fixed the price at which they will dispose of their territory and permit the people of the United States to go on with this great work.

The Commission further say with reference to the Panama ronte:

The Government of Colombia, on the contrary, in whose territory the Panama route lies, has granted concessions which belong to or are controlled by the New Panama Canal Company and have many years to run. These concessions, limited in time and defective in other ways, would not be adequate authority for the purposes of the United States, but while they exist Colombia is not free to treat with this Government.

I submit, in view of that report, which is now fresh before this House from the Commission, that the proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota to authorize the President to negotiate with the Panama people, is unwise. The American people want the canal, and I believe the Nicaragua Canal to be the better route.

I am satisfied that it will be impossible in the next year or two to obtain or dispose of the concessions held by the Panama Company. We, by this bill, simply authorize the President to acquire the right of way, not to build a canal. After he has acquired a route he can proceed to build the canal. This bill is not going to become a law within thirty days.

It must go to the Senate, and thirty days or more will be consumed in its consideration there.

If the Panama people intend to make a definite proposition, there will be ample time for the consideration of it during the pendency of the bill in the Senate. The amendment is a proposition to give the Panama people $40,000,000 for a worthless piece of property. They have nothing; it is a bankrupt institution. It is discredited, and rather than vote for that amendment I would withhold action entirely and deal directly with Colombia.

If this amendment should be adopted, it will be virtually a direction to the President to pay $40,000,000 of the people's money for something that is to-day worthless in the hands of the Panama Company. Such a proposition should not be favored.

[Mr. GIBSON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, this is a proposition that both parties are practically united upon, at least in its general purposes. The country, regardless of politics, is united upon the subject for building an isthmian canal. We have had, however, here in this discussion only the rosy side of the proposition. I do not believe that this canal can be built for anything near the sum of money suggested by those who have spoken upon the bill. The French company has spent $246,000,000, and has only completed one-fourth of the Panama Canal. That canal, according to the report of the Walker Commission, will cost somewhat less than the Nicaragua Canal to build, and yet one-fourth of that work has already cost $246,000,000, and the other three-fourths yet remain to be built. We must take into consideration the character of the climate in which this work is to be done. Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, this is a proposition that both parthe climate in which this work is to be done.

History records the loss of life in constructing the Panama Railway. It was built almost wholly by Irish labor, and no race of people will endure more than they. We know there is a dead Irishman for every tie of that railroad. A grave was dug for every tie that was laid on that line of road. In building a railroad they do not excavate to the same depth as they do digging a canal, and the germs of disease in the Tropics will all be brought to the surface in canal digging so that we will have or service. to the surface in canal digging, so that we will have on sanitary grounds a necessary large increase of wages for this dangerous occupation. That country has, we are told, 24 feet of rainfall per annum on a part of this route; and therefore it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we should recognize the fact that the expenditure on the construction of this great enterprise will in all probability be very largely in excess of anything now contemplated. The first report on that route was estimated a cost of $31,000,000.

Let us examine the various estimates:

and the continue that the continue to
Child's estimate, 1852	$31,538,319
Lull's estimate, 1873	65, 722, 137
Menocal estimate, 1885.	64, 036, 197
Maritime Canal Project estimate, 1890	65,000,000
Ludlow Board estimate, 1897	133,000,000
Walker Nicaraguan Commission estimate, 1899.	118, 113, 790
Walker Isthmian Commission second estimate, 1901	189,864,062

The estimates of the Nicaragua Canal have ranged from $31,000,000 to nearly $190,000,000 during a period of fifty years.

Each successive estimate has shown an increase, and each successive survey has brought new difficulties to the front, and while we enter in this proposition let us do it with our eyes open, and recognize the fact that the expenditure is necessarily going to be very largely in excess of any of the estimates. No man ever builds a house, making an estimate in advance, but that when he gets through he finds that it has cost him more than he had except the control of the cost of the gets through he finds that it has cost him more than he had expected. No railroad was ever built in this country, or very few at least, the cost of which ever came inside of the largest estimate. In a tropical, deadly climate, with the heavy rainfall of that region, we must be prepared to meet an expenditure larger than now contemplated, and let the people be prepared for it and not disappointed when they find that we have not counted the cost. Let them understand when we embark in an isthmian enterprise that we are undertaking the construction of the most costly work ever at any time assumed by any nation on the globe.

We will make many mistakes. France made mistakes, and we will make some of like character. There may be some dishonesty in management and contracts. The contractors and builders will not go to that climate for their health alone. Every effort will be made to realize all the profit out of the work that can be obtained. I am prepared to vote for this proposition, but at the same time I want to call attention to the fact that this is only the beginning of an enormous expenditure, which we hope will be justified by the results. The American people have declared in favor of this enterprise. We, as their representatives, should record their will as expressed in platforms and at the polls. But now is not the time to disguise the magnitude of this work that we are about to undertake. I wish I could feel sure that the cost would not exceed the estimate threefold.

The reasons for constructing such a work are convincing and strong. Its importance and magnitude can not be well overesti-

The estimate is based upon the cost of work upon the Chicago drainage canal

A liberal addition is made to the prices paid for excavation of rock and soil in Illinois, and it is assumed upon this basis that one hundred and ninety millions will cover the cost.

But the work at Chicago was carried on by machinery in the immediate vicinity of abundant fuel and in the center of a great food-producing region. There were no daily waterspouts to wash away and destroy the works as fast as they were built. No epidemics decimated the ranks of the laborers.

In short, the conditions are so different that the Chicago project forms no proper basis upon which to make this estimate. arguments in favor of the canal have been clear and cogent and have long ago convinced the country. For four hundred years an isthmian waterway has been the desire of the world. The Clayton-Bulwer treaty, forbidding us to control the work when built, has delayed progress for many years.

That obstacle has been removed, and now there is practically nothing in the way but one of cost. But let us not deceive ourselves with the idea that this tremendous enterprise can be carried to completion for less than $200,000,000. I desire to go upon record as predicting that this sum will only get the enterprise fairly under way. [Applause.]

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask if an amend-

Mr. MORRELL. ment is now in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Not at present.

The MORRELL. Then I desire to ask unanimous consent to a morre desired by the gentless of the consent of son that while I appreciate the substitute offered by the gentle-man from New Jersey [Mr. Parker], yet I am of the opinion that the only two routes in regard to which we have any knowledge, or in regard to which we can give the Executive the power to act, are the Nicaragua route and what is known as the Panama

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that his proposed amendment by way of a substitute be printed in the RECORD for the information of the committee. Is there objection? [After a pause.] hears none.

The proposed substitute is as follows:

The proposed substitute is as follows:

That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to acquire from the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua or the United States of Colombia, for and in behalf of the United States, control of such franchises and of such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua as may be desirable and necessary on which to excavate, construct, and protect a canal of such depth and capacity as will be sufficient for the movements of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use; and such sum as may be necessary to secure such control is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Sec. 2. That when the President has secured full control over the territory in section 1 referred to he shall direct the Secretary of War to excavate and construct a canal and waterway from a point on the shore of the Caribbean Sea to a point on the Pacific Ocean. Such canal shall be of sufficient capacity and depth as that it may be used by vessels of the largest tonnage and greatest draft now in use, and shall be supplied with all necessary locks and other appliances to meet the necessities of vessels passing from one port to the other; and the Secretary of War shall also construct such safe and commodious harbors at the termini of said canal and such provisions for defense as may be necessary for the safety and protection of said canal and harbors.

Sec. 3. That the President shall cause such surveys as may be necessary for said canal and harbors, and in the constructing of the same may employ such persons as he may deem necessary.

Sec. 4. That in any negotiations with the States of Costa Rica, or Nicaragua, or the United States of Colombia the President may have, the President is authorized to guarantee to said States the use of said canal and harbors, upon such terms as may be agreed upon, for all vessels owned by said States or by citizens thereof.

Sec. 5. The sum of $10,000,000 is hereby appropriated, or, if it is decided t paid for as appropriations may from time to time be hereafter made, on warrants to be drawn by the President of the United States, not to exceed in the aggregate $180,000,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, as no other gentleman desires to occupy the time, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, does that cut out the reading of the bill for the purpose of amendment?
The CHAIRMAN. No.
The motion of Mr. Hepburn was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GROSVENOR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House bill 3110, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that all general debate on the pending bill 3110 be closed at 2 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all general debate upon the pending bill be closed to-morrow at 2 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. I want to ask him when the remarks that he made yesterday will be published? I see that they are withheld from the Record. They extended over some two hours and there was much that was interesting in and about them, and I want to know if they will be in the Record to-morrow morning?

Mr. HEPBURN. I am not prepared to say; they are very lengthy and I was occupied last night and was not able to revise

Mr. CANNON. It was a debate of a nature that it seems to me that if it is practicable to do it the committee should have the benefit of it. I should feel much more like consenting to close the debate at 2 o'clock if I knew that we could have the benefit of the debate of yesterday.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that he can have the benefit of it. If I do not have time to revise and edit my remarks for publication to-morrow, I will send him the

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; I have no desire to go to the manuscript. It is laborious to do that; but it was an exceedingly important two hours' discussion, and it does seem to me that the debate was of that nature that we should have the benefit of it in the Congressional Record, inasmuch as we shall probably be called upon to vote upon the proposition to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if it is his purpose after closing debate to take the bill up under the five-minute rule and let it run until the reading of the bill is completed?

Mr. HEPBURN. That is the purpose I have at present.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if that will give all the members who have signified their intention to speak upon the bill a chance to do so?

Mr. HEPBURN. It will. I am informed that all the gentlemen have had or will have an opportunity to speak.

Mr. HOPKINS. I would suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that he modify his motion so that if no general debate is asked for to-morrow, we can commence under the five-minute rule earlier than 2 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will restate the request of the gentleman from Iowa. It is that all general debate on the pending bill, 3110, shall close to-morrow at 2 o'clock, with the understanding that after that the debate will be under the five-minute rule until the reading of the bill is completed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PERMANENT CENSUS BUREAU.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that House bill 198, providing for a permanent census, be taken up immediately after the determination of the bill now under consideration, to be made a continuous order until disposed of by the House, but not to interfere with appropriation bills, bills raising revenue, or conference reports.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on the Census, asks unanimous consent that House bill 198, being a bill to make a permanent census, be made a continuing order after the disposition of the present bill, not to interfere, however, with bills raising revenue, making appropriations, or with conference reports, the bill to be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BARTLETT. As I understand, this is a bill for the establishment of a permanent Census Bureau?

Mr. HODENES Vermine State of the Union.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.
Mr. BARTLETT. Does it provide for nothing besides the establishment of that Bureau?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is all.

Mr. BARTLETT. It does not include anything else in reference to the census?

Mr. HOPKINS. Nothing whatever. The bill has been reported unanimously, every Democratic member of the committee favor-

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the order requested by the gentleman from Illinois will be made.

LYNCHING OF ITALIANS AT TALLULAH, LA.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 9, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved. ISTHMIAN CANAL.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the special order, House bill No. 3110.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. Grosvenor in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3110) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate has been limited to two hours.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, having in previous Congresses spoken on two different occasions at length in the discussion of this general subject, I had not intended to consume any time of the committee during this debate, but inasmuch as the minority members of the committee have been very brief in their remarks I presume I may be indulged for a few moments to emphasize my position and urge the passage now of the Hepburn bill pure and simple, as it is, without alteration, equivocation, or delay. [Applause.]

I remember not, if I ever took the trouble to ascertain, in just how many Congresses previous to the Fifty-fifth the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had considered this question. tion, but when I came into the committee in the Fifty-fifth Congress we took the subject up elaborately, with painstaking diligence and care. We heard the Panama people on oath, learndiligence and care. We heard the Panama people on oath, learning everything to their advantage which has subsequently been disclosed and some important things to their disadvantage. We heard those urging the claims of the Nicaragua plan. We read everything obtainable upon the subject. And we came to the conclusion that a canal ought to be constructed on the Nicaragua route, and that it ought to be constructed by the Govern-ment of the United States. We reported a bill, substantially ment of the United States. We reported a bill, substantially identical with the pending measure. Some members thought that there ought to be further delay for information. Delay was obtained. Another Commission was secured. In the last Congress we reported practically the same bill. Further delay was sought and obtained; and now, about four years from the time when the Panama people told us under oath that two-fifths of the work was done, and that they would entirely complete it in ten years, the work is not perceptibly advanced, those people are still making their figures and professions in the case, and gentlemenhere are asking for further delay in order to study the compara-

We find our constitutional warrant for the construction of a Government canal in the theory that it would be useful for the cond Navy of our country. We also believe that it would be useful in the future be Army and Navy of our country. We also believe that it would be advisable on political grounds, and would in the future be found very advantageous to us. We also believe that incidentally our expenditure for the construction of the canal could be largely our expenditure for the construction of the canal could be largely recouped by allowing the commerce of the world on the widest and most liberal terms to use the canal. And we believe that, not the distance in the length of the canal, but the distance from port to port determines the problem of distance. We find that between all Atlantic and Gulf ports and all Pacific ports the Nicaragua route would be shorter; we find that from all Atlantic and Gulf ports to all Asiatic countries the Nicaragua route would be shorter. We find that from all Pacific ports to all Asiatic countries the Nicaragua route would be shorter. We find that from all Pacific ports to all European ports the Nicaragua route would be shorter. It is manifest, therefore, that for our military and naval purposes, as well as for the interests of our people in commerce, the Nicaragua route has infinitely the advantage in distance.

The question of comparative physical advantages has been discussed at length—the large fresh-water lake on the lowest depression in the mountain range affording wide anchorage for ships and abundance of fresh water to cleanse their bottoms, and affording at the summit level abundance of water to float ships in both directions to the oceans; the matter of trade winds and superior healthfulness of the region presenting advantages which are not offered by the Panama route, all having been clearly and convincingly set forth, as well as the corresponding defects and disadvantages of the Panama enterprise. I do not blame the promoters who have embarked their fortunes in the Panama scheme for seeking escape from the ruin in which they seem to be engulfed. Nor do I impugn the motives of any man who proposes yet to consider the question further. Gentlemen have that right, and it is proper that we should be careful in deciding matters of great moment. But report after report has been published; many committees and commissions have reported. The subject of the feasibility and the advantages of the Nicaragua Canal have been discussed for three or four hundred years.

Volume on volume, book on book, have been published, until the whole world is scarcely able to contain what has been written. And if people who have kept up with the literature on the subject are not now persuaded that the Nicaragua Canal can and should be constructed, it appears to me that in their doubts they are almost in the position of the brothers of Dives, who, having failed to listen to the preachers of righteousness and the Redeemer of mankind Himself, might not, in the opinion of Father Abraham, be willing to believe even though one should rise from the dead and

The American people, in my opinion, agree with us that the Nicaragua Canal ought be constructed, and constructed now. If the Panama people have a better thing, then when it comes had passed the House and reached the Senate, or when it comes back to us, we can, if necessary, even in conference, avail ourselves of all the advantage that may be hereafter offered by the Panama people.

I thank the committee for the patient attention it has given me.
Mr. SIMS. The gentleman, I believe, is a member of the committee that has reported this bill?
Mr. ADAMSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes, sir. Mr. SIMS. Then, may I ask the gentleman a question for in-

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not a fact that the Southern States bordering on the Gulf of Mexico would be more directly benefited by the Nicaragua route than by the Panama route?

Mr. ADAMSON. I have not said one word about the advantage to any section to result from this enterprise. I would not support to any section to result from this enterprise. I would not support this measure solely because it benefited one section more than another; nor would I oppose it solely because it benefited one section less than another. What the gentleman's question suggests may be true. But I am an American. What I want is an American canal that can be used by the American Government for its benefit, and incidentally for the benefit of the American people, by enabling the ships of our own and every other country to go through it and to traverse all the sees—to trade with all our own. through it and to traverse all the seas—to trade with all our own ports and all the ports of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman has not answered my question; there-

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman has not answered my question; therefore I will ask him another.

Mr. ADAMSON. I said it was possibly true.

Mr. SIMS. What does the gentleman think about it? What is his judgment, not what is his view of possibilities?

Mr. ADAMSON. I believe all the ports of the South Atlantic and the Gulf will be benefited. I believe all the ports of our Pacific coast will be benefited, and I believe New England ports will be benefited, and I believe all the Mississippi Valley will be benefited.

Mr. SIMS. I have not asked anything about New England.

am trying to get the witness to confine himself to a particular locality, and he declines.

Mr. ADAMSON. The Southern people generally believe that they would be largely benefited, and I think you believe so.

Mr. SIMS. Now, further, are there not better harbor facilities at each end of the Panama route than at either end of the Nicara-

Mr. ADAMSON. Well, it is so believed at this time, but the estimates show that we can easily and cheaply construct harbors at Grey Town and Brito, the termini of the Nicaragua route.

Mr. SIMS. I will ask you further if the distance is not in favor of the Panama route?

Mr. ADAMSON. No, sir. It appears so from port to port, but the Nicaragua route

Mr. SIMS. I have reference to the distance from port to port.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes, but—

Mr. SIMS. Now, further—

Mr. ADAMSON. Hold on. The Nicaragua route is provided by nature with a vast lake, which, used in connection with the section of river to the west and the San Juan River to the Canchyda dam on the cest will reduce the optimization of the content of the co chuda dam on the east, will reduce the entire linear extent to almost as short a distance as the Panama route.

Mr. SIMS. Now, another question: Is it possible, under any circumstances or any conceivable conditions, to ever have an ocean-level ditch by the Nicaragua route?

Mr. ADAMSON. I think the prospect of a sea-level canal by either route is exceedingly remote; but, all things considered, I do not believe that if the Panama Company would offer to give us all they have, and in addition thereto the $109,000,000 that they formerly asked us to pay for their property, we could afford to undertake the Panama project.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman, then, would not consider the Panama route under any circumstances?

Mr. ADAMSON. Oh, yes; we did consider it long and carefully. The reliated it. [Laughter.] The reason I say what I do is because we have considered

Mr. SIMS. I think the gentleman is developing what I thought would be developed; that is, his partisanship to a route rather than his desire for the best canal under the circumstances.

Mr. ADAMSON. No, sir; I am not the partisan of a route. I am declaring the results of our thorough investigation of both

Mr. WOOTEN. Mr. Chairman, speaking for the first time in this presence, I do not know that I would have chosen any measure to advocate in preference to the one under discussion. The pending bill is the culmination of three quarters of a century of commercial aspiration, political promise, and national development. For as long a period as the life of any man on this floor the great enterprise contemplated by its provisions has indeed been "the pillar of a people's hope, the center of a world's desire." I do not intend to consume any part of the short time allotted to me in attempting to recall or to recapitulate in detail the arguments and influences that during all these years have operated to bring about the condition of public sentiment that to-day exists in favor of this bill.

They have sufficed to solidify every interest, to subdue every opposition, and to obliterate even party lines. It is enough to say and to know, as every man here does know, that these arguments have addressed themselves to the nation's reason and have convinced its judgment; that these influences have appealed to the nation's pride and have persuaded its patriotism, until now nei-ther in this Hall nor throughout the entire Republic is there found any voice so contentious as to assail its provisions with avowed disfavor or to oppose its passage with open resistance.

And yet, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that what was once a pronounced and emphatic opposition may perhaps have assumed the more subtle and sinister form of a tentative and temporizing expediency. I do not for a moment question the good faith or the motives of the gentlemen who have suggested amendments to the bill; but I am constrained to believe that if those amendments were adopted, this measure, instead of being a plain and specific plan for the immediate construction of an isthmian canal, would become a mere contingent and conditional project, fraught with inevitable delays, surrounded with innumerable doubts and difficulties, and in all probability doomed to ultimate failure amid the controversies and complications of international politics and interminable litigation.

We are all familiar with the deceptive dangers of Grecian gifts and the traditional treachery of Trojan horses, and it is a coinci-dence not unworthy of careful consideration that the gentlemen who are proposing to amend and to modify this bill are for the most part those who formerly openly opposed and voted against it. Now that this measure has reached its majority and is preparing to take its place among the finished products of American statesmanship, if aught is required to correct or to perfect it, I for one would prefer to intrust that delicate task to those who stood around its cradle, who nurtured its infancy, and who have reared it to manhood's estate. [Loud applause.]

I can not understand how it is, in view of the exhaustive investigation that has been made by the Commission appointed for the purpose, and the deliberate and intelligent attention paid to this bill by the committee having it in charge, that gentlemen here who profess to favor the enterprise propose to substitute for the well-considered judgment of the Commission and the com-for the well-considered judgment of the Commission and the committee a plan of procedure that reopens to doubt and difficulty the entire project. When we come to examine the amendments that are suggested, in my judgment they are very objectionable in one case and in the other wholly unnecessary.

The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Morris] contemplates the alternative selection of the Panama route instead of the Nicaragua route, leaving the choice to the discretion of the President and the Canal Commission. The reasons given for this tentative proposition appear to me to be as variable and vagrant as some of the pronunciations to which we have listened in the course of this debate. [Laughter.] The respective engineering features of these two routes are no longer doubtful or debatable. The relative advantages and disadvantages of the two plans have been under consideration for years.

A faithful and capable Commission, at the cost of many months of labor and nearly a million dollars, has thoroughly investigated and reported upon them both within the past two years. The and reported upon them both within the past two years. The French promoters and the French Government have left untried no resource of engineering skill to find out the physical facts and possibilities of the Panama route. Our own Commission reviewed the work of the French engineers and made their own observations and surveys of the Nicaragua route, and they have given us the result of both in this report, marshaling the relative advan-tages and disadvantages of each in intelligent contrast and discrimination.

I will not take time to reiterate the details of that comparison, for they have already been discussed more or less fully in the course of this debate, but the facts given clearly establish that the Nicaragua route is from 400 to 600 miles nearer our own ports; that it is situated in a more healthful locality; that it runs through a much more desirable country and will develop a valuable trade along its own course; that its construction will be safeguarded by the consent of governments possessing some degree of stability and solvency, and that its physical features are more suitable for the kind of canal that is contemplated by the financial estimates of our Government.

The conclusion of the whole matter, in the opinion of the Commission, all things considered, is that "the Nicaragua route is preferable as being the most feasible and practicable route for an isthmian canal," and they accordingly so indorse and recommend the same. It is true that this conclusion and recommendation were influenced in some degree, but not entirely nor mainly, by the relative cost of the two routes, after taking into consideration the probable cost of acquiring the properties of the Panama company, which must be purchased by the United States in case that route is adopted.

According to the figures given by the Commission in its report the Nicaragua Canal would cost about $45,000,000 more than the Panama Canal, exclusive of the value of the property and concessions in each case; but the value of the Panama Company's property as submitted to the Commission as late as last November was $109,000,000, which would make that route cost about $63,000,000 more than the Nicaragua route and this the Commission. ser was $109,000,000, which would make that route cost about $63,000,000 more than the Nicaragua route, and this the Commission considered to be too much to entitle the Panama scheme to consideration in making their recommendations. The Commission estimated that the Panama properties are worth not exceeding $40,000,000. It is now stated in the public prints, and has been urged upon this floor, that the Panama Canal Company is willing to sell its properties to the United States for $40,000,000, the value placed upon it by the Commission, which would make the cost of the two routes approximately the same, but would still leave unanswered the potent reasons in favor of the Nicaragua route as given in this report.

But who knows or is authorized to state that the Panama Company or the French Government has made or will make such an offer? And who knows what will be included in the offer if it should be made? It is very remarkable that as late as two months ago they put the value of this property at $109,000,000, and are now willing to cut it down more than 60 per cent. If this offer is to include the concessions which the company now holds at the hands of the Colombian Government and the lands on which their railroad and canal are constructed, then I beg to call attention to page 102 of the Commission's report, where it is made to clearly appear that those concessions and lands will be totally without value in our hands because they will be immediately forfeited if the Panama Canal Company fails to complete its canal according to contract.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a legal question? When we deal with the Colombian Government—

Mr. WOOTEN. I understand and anticipate the gentleman's question. He wants to know what will be the legal effect of dealing with the Colombian Government as affecting the rights of this company under its concession. That involves difficult and complicated questions of law that I prefer not to inject into this controversy, and the very fact that such issues are raised by the proposition to substitute the Panama for the Nicaragua route constitutes one of the strongest objections to the amendments suggested. Why should we introduce difficult questions of law and seek complicated litigation when we are dealing with a plain and practical plan of legislation before this House? I prefer not to enter the domain of international law and politics in order to gratify the dilatory tactics of gentlemen who have never been questions involving the rights of the holders of franchises into the problem that is so plainly and feasibly outlined by this bill, and if there were no other objection to the amendments that alone ought to be enough, for no one can foresee how such complica-tions may end, and they will undoubtedly delay, if they do not defeat, the construction of the canal.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of my colleague be extended ten minutes.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous

In CHARMAN. The gendeman from Texas asks diaminous consent that the time of his colleague be extended ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WOOTEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I say no man knows what this offer would include if it were made. We would have to secure a new concession from the Colombian Government, because the concession held by the Panama Company is a conditional and encumbered concession, and we would be dealing with a government whose political fortunes are so fickle and whose financial needs are so great that it may take an indefinite time and require an indefinite amount of money to secure a favorable concession.

Then, the railroad property belonging to the Panama Com-pany, which is an indispensable and the most valuable physical feature of their whole scheme, is bound up and burdened with a contract whose complications promise no end of difficulties. In 1889, 17 American railroads, constituting the Transcontinental Association, and composing every great railway line that reaches the Gulf of Mexico and the Pacific Ocean, entered into a contract with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company by which they guaranteed to the latter a monthly revenue of $75,000 upon the transportation of all freight and passengers between New York and San Francisco; and the express condition of that obligation is that the Panama Railroad shall be and remain the sole means of communication across the Isthmus of Panama.

I do not stop to discuss what that contract means in all its bearings and implications, but it very clearly contemplates that these great railway systems, combined with the Pacific Mail Steamship monopoly, will never willingly surrender the control of the Panama Railroad or permit the construction of the Panama Canal. That is another difficulty involved in the Panama route. More-ever, who is to treat with and bind the thousands of French stockholders in the New Panama Canal Company? There are said to be more than 200,000 of them, scattered all over France. Everybe more than 200,000 of them, scattered all over France. Every-body knows that the New Panama Company is merely the re-ceiver of the old company. These people are foreigners, and smart-ing under the bitter experiences of past misfortunes, for the history of the Panama Company for the last forty years has been one of financial ruin, personal disgrace, and almost political revo-lution in France. Shall we take a legacy like that, and trust to the tentative and difficult negotiations that will be necessary to acquire and conclude the rights of these stockholders and to place acquire and conclude the rights of these stockholders and to place us in full title and possession of the company's properties?

These are some of the questions we will have to face if we seek

These are some or the questions we will have to face it we seek to substitute the Panama route for the Nicaragua route, and they will so overload and embarrass the whole project of an interoceanic canal that, in my humble judgment, its construction will be indefinitely delayed, if not absolutely defeated. The people of this Union want the canal constructed, and they want it begun at once. If there was ever a uniform and universal demand upon the rest of the American result in favor of the rest of the American result in favor of the rest of the American result in favor of the rest of the American result in favor of the rest of the American result in favor of the rest of the American result in favor of the rest of the American result in favor of the rest of the American result in the rest of the American result in the result is the American result in the result in the result is the result in the result in the result in the result is the result in the result in the result is the result in the result in the result in the result in the result is the result in the result in the result in the result is the result in the res once. If there was ever a uniform and universal demand upon the part of the American people in favor of any great public enterprise, it is voiced in their united support of this measure. It is too great a project to admit of temporizing and dilatory nego-tiations. What matters a few more miles in the length of one route over the other, or the expenditure of a few more millions of dollars, when the commerce of our own country and of the world is clamoring at our coasts and waits our energetic and intelligent action to open for it a pathway from the Orient to the Occident? Any reasonable difference in cost will be more than counterbal-anced by the measureless advantages of this great waterway be-

Any reasonable difference in cost will be more than counterbal-anced by the measureless advantages of this great waterway be-tween the two oceans. But I deny that the Panama route is or will be the cheaper. Even admit that the company proposes to sell its properties for $40,000,000, I have shown that the offer in-cludes a large amount of speculative and valueless assets, and then what do we buy? It has taken that company, backed by the French Government, fifty years to build one-fourth of the canal, and it has cost $240,000,000 to do that. Now we are asked to buy this unfinished job for forty millions and complete it at nobody knows what cost. At the same ratio it has cost the French Gov-ernment and people it will require $720,000,000 in addition to the $40,000,000 for the wreck of the uncompleted fraction now con-structed. structed.

I have said that this is not a party question, and yet I may be the permitted to remind my friends on this side of the House that the last Democratic national platform declares in favor, not of an isthmian canal in general, but for a specific route for that canal, to wit, the Nicaragua route. So much for the amendment that seeks to vary the terms of the bill in regard to the route for the canal. Now, in reference to the amendment that has been sug-gested to insert in the bill a specific provision for the fortification of the canal, it does not appear to me to be either a necessary or a desirable amendment. The right to protect the canal and har-bors by fortifications is contained in the bill as it now reads, by every intelligent and necessary intendment.

In section 2 it is plainly declared that the Secretary of War, among other things, "shall construct such provisions for defense as may be necessary for the safety and protection of said canal and harbors"—that is the exact language of the bill; and in section 6 he is authorized to contract and pay for such "defenses."

What more is required? What sort of "defenses" are meant by this language? The Secretary of War is only interested in land What more is required? What sort of "defenses" are meant by this language? The Secretary of War is only interested in land defenses, and the most usual and approved method of land defenses is by fortifications.

There has for some time been a moot question between the War and Navy Departments as to whether the preferable mode of defending this canal was by land or sea, and this bill is intended to settle that question so far as the land is concerned by vesting in the Secretary of War the power and making it his duty to provide proper land defenses, among which I take it no one doubts will be adequate fortifications. The Constitution of the United States itself contains no broader or more specific provision for the protection of any part of our domain. The word there used is the same—"defense"—and it has been uniformly construed to cover and authorize every military and naval enterprise processary to and authorize every military and naval enterprise necessary to safeguard the integrity and sovereignty of our territory and national rights.

Under that provision hundreds of forts bristle with our guns and hundreds of war ships guard the coasts and harbors of the entire country. In view of this fact and of the terms of the treaty that was lately ratified at the other end of the Capitol, to insert a specific requirement for fortifications in this bill would, it seems to me, couple a warlike menace with a peaceful purpose and savor more of spurious sentiment than sound and salutary statesmanship. I quite agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton] when he said yesterday that the value of this canal to us and to the world depends upon its absolute freedom of communication and its neutrality as a great international highway of commerce, and I think it would be bad policy and bad manners to announce its construction to the world coupled with a gratuitous declaration of warlike preparation.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the bill will pass without alteration in any essential feature. It will be the crowning act in a long series of wise and prophetic provisions for the peaceful development of our just and reasonable ambitions as a people. It will bind together the commercial interests of our own country and bind together the commercial interests of our own country and promote our rational relations with all the nations of the earth. Founded on the noble conception of commercial freedom and friendship throughout the world, it will hasten the day when this Government shall abandon its narrow and selfish policy of commercial isolation and establish as the badge of its Christian civilization free trade with all mankind. [Applause.]

It involves and contemplates the only true and safe policy of national expansion as expression based on corporations.

national expansion—a commercial expansion based on competitive superiority in the markets of the world and moral supremacy in the councils of Christendom, rather than territorial extension acquired by bloody conquest and maintained by forcible colonization. The construction of this canal will establish the Monroe doctrine in international commerce as well as in international politics, and that pan-American ideal for which patriots and statesmen have planned since this Western world became the abode of freedom will ripen into realization as the culminating achievement of the new century. [Applause.]

It has been suggested here that the Gulf States are peculiarly interested in this great movement. That is true, they are—locally and peculiarly; but I deny that to them alone will be confined the benefits of this measure. The whole country will correspondingly feel the fructifying influence of this immense commercial advance. The Atlantic and the Pacific seaboards will find in this canal the common bond of a common interest in domestic and foreign trade, and its construction will bring together the borders of the contiand its construction will bring together the borders of the continent in a compact of commercial conquest. And then the great Mississippi Valley will feel its blessings in a renewed vigor of commercial aspiration and advancement.

That vast region between the eastern and western ramparts of the Union, that is to-day the garden of the continent and the granary of the world, will especially reap the fruits of an interoceanic canal, while the Father of Waters, that for the last quarter of a century has lost his former power in the world of traffic, will be restored to his wonted functions as the arbiter and artery of our whole internal commerce. Mr. Chairman, aside from its of our whole internal commerce. Mr. Chairman, aside from its mere material aspects, the construction of this canal has for my mind an impressive meaning. It is the realization of a historic dream that troubled the minds of men four centuries ago and led to the discovery and exploration of the New World.

The last great Emperor of Spain conceived its possibility, and the voyages of the first great navigators of the globe had their inspiration and motive in the vain and romantic effort to find the fabled passage that would connect the two great oceans of earth. Seventy-five years ago Simon Bolivar, the liberator of South America, first proposed the construction of an isthmian canal at the first Panama conference of 1826, and the half savage old patriot had prophetic visions of its possibilities for America that will some day come true.

He dreamed of a time when the isthmus of the New World would be to modern civilization what the Corinthian isthmus was for the Greeks, and rising on the wings of his superb conception he foretold the day when "that magnificent portion of America situate between the two oceans would become the emporium of the universe; when its canals would shorten the distance which separates the nations of the earth and render the commercial ties which connect Europe, America, and Asia closer and stronger; when the yieldings of the four parts of the world would be brought as a tribute to this happy section of the globe; when perhaps the true capital of the earth may be established here and be made exactly what Constantine desired that Byzantium should be."

should be."

Later on, in 1849, the scholarly and scientific Maury pointed out the unsurpassed advantages of the construction of an isthmian railroad and canal. He declared that the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea constitute the Mediterranean of the New World, with possibilities of commerce and civilization as far superior to those of that elder sea as our laws, institutions, and capabilities are immeasurably beyond the systems of the Old World. He declared that "All, and more, too, that the Mediterranean is to Europe, Africa, and Asia, this sea is to America and the world," and that "an era and epoch in the affairs of nations will date from the opening of this communication."

We are to-day upon the point of making that date and opening

We are to-day upon the point of making that date and opening that epoch, and it is an occasion for thoughts both solemn and sublime. In the name and for the sake of all these things I hope sublime. In the name and for the sake of all these things I hope this bill will pass without amendment, without delay, without complication; for in the fullness of time it will bring to this councillation; for in the fullness of time it will bring to this councillation; for in the fullness of time it will bring to this councillation. try the realization of dreams of commercial power, of real, safe, eaceable expansion along constitutional lines, such as could not, in my judgment, flow from any other measure that has in all our history challenged the attention of the American Congress.

[Loud applause.]

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, in order that a number of gentlemen who desire to make remarks on this subject may be accommodated, I ask unanimous consent that the time for the closing of general debate may be extended to half past 2 o'clock instead of 2 o'clock.

Mr. HOPKINS. For the present, I think I must object to this request. We can determine that question when 2 o'clock shall

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may be allowed to state that there is already a demand for at least three hours of debate.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there further objection? The Chair

[Mr. SPARKMAN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend until this morning to take any part in the general debate upon this bill, but rather to content myself with such remarks as I desire to make under the five-minute rule. But it seems to me that possibly I may desire a little more than five minutes or ten minutes, and therefore I have sought and obtained recognition.

In the very beginning I want to say that this is a business proposition and should be considered from the practical business standpoint.

Gentlemen say for four hundred years this canal has been talked about, and let us fall over each other and do something now. Well, now, for the first time in the history of the world, from a practical standpoint, we can begin to make sure progress upon an American isthmian canal. Gentlemen talk learnedly about not listening to wicked people upon the floor of this House who have not heretofore been friendly to this canal. I do not who have not heretofore been friendly to this canal. I do not know any such. I have for years advocated the canal, or a canal, and I advocate a canal now. True, I have not approved, without information and in the absence of any fixed law and treaty, action upon the part of Congress that would disregard the surroundings, and I have been called hard names at times because I have not been willing to go forward when there was no road in which we could in good faith travel. Now there is a road, and there is no man in the sound of my voice, in my judgment, who will rise in his place and say that he regrets the nonpassage of the Nicaragua Canal bill last session, or at any other session heretofore of the American Congress. I hear no response. So a truce to this kind of argument. Let us get down to the actual facts and the actual conditions. and the actual conditions.

I regret, Mr. Chairman, that on a great measure of this kind the gentleman in charge of the bill, who has for years studied it and is familiar with it, who is at the head of a great committee, which committee is the servant of this House and not its master—that is what committees are for—all committees are the servants of this House and can be challenged and asked for information with invanith by the backlets. with impunity by the humblest member upon the floor of the great American House of Representatives—I regret that the gentleman in charge of this bill, who stood for two hours and so ably advocated the bill, and so courteously answered all questions that were put to him, has not yet seen proper, although requested, to put that two hours' discussion in the RECORD.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me a moment?

Mr. CANNON. With pleasure. Mr. HEPBURN. I stated to the gentleman yesterday, when he made a statement similar to this, I thought querulously and for an improper purpose, the reasons why I had not printed my remarks, why I had elected to follow a course that is universal in this House. But I am always anxious to accommodate the gentleman; and I will now, as I promised him then, furnish him with the information contained in that speech. [Tendering manu-

Mr. CANNON. Ah! Now, then, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman says that he follows the course that is always or almost uni-man says that he follows the course that is always or almost universally followed in this House. I deny it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman look over the record of this debate and see how many—the large majority of those who have spoken—have not yet published their remarks?

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the courtesy of the House if I need a little further time to extend it.

It is one thing for the chairman of a great committee, familiar with a great subject for years, putting a great measure that is to last through the centuries before a great deliberative body for considwhere many members asked many important questions, and where, with due respect to him, and I presume without intention, he gave something of misinformation. It is one thing for a member thus situated to withhold his remarks from the RECORD. and quite another for a member differently situated who desires to extend his remarks to withhold his remarks from the RECORD.

I say here and now that I have no recollection of any gentleman at the head of a committee on a great bill who has done so. Is there any way to prevent this, said somebody? I do not know of any rule that prevents it; but I do not think it is fair to the House of Representatives that that course should have been pursued, and purposely pursued. It is not a question as to whether I am hypercritical. It is a question of decent parliamentary proceeding. I shall go on and do the best I can, and speak about the merits of

In my judgment, I am as good a friend of an isthmian canal as any gentleman upon the floor of this House, not excepting the gentleman from Iowa, and always have been. Now, what does I will have that of the gentleman from Iowa, because I want something of information for myself and the House, I think. Gentlemen seem to be in a hurry. I will read this provision in

That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to acquire from the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, for and in behalf of the United States, control of such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua.

And so forth.

And then there is an indefinite appropriation. Five millions or five hundred millions is made for that purpose. Now, then, I understand that the bill refers to territorial control. Am I right understand that the bill refers to territorial control. Am I right about that? A lease, a control, a territorial control that does not affect the property between the boundaries. Or, to put it in another way—and let us see if I am right about it—a strip 5 miles wide on each side and 3 miles or 2 miles or 10 miles—I do not know—some gentleman of the Commission says 10 miles, but I believe some gentleman has said 3 on a side. Who owns that territory, in whole or in part? It is owned largely by private owners. How much the old Maritime Canal Company, or those who inherited its assets, own of that territory I do not know. How much prominent Nicaraguans and Costa Ricans own of that termuch prominent Nicaraguans and Costa Ricans own of that territory I do not know. How much prominent Americans own of that territory I do not know. Now, I understand, in the first instance, that this authority—and the gentleman from Iowa will correct me if I am wrong—

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman from Iowa would not undertake a labor of that kind. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Oh, the gentleman from Iowa, if he was as able in good faith in giving information as he is flip of the tongue, he would be a better legislator. [Laughter.]

Now, I ask again if the control he referred to in the first section

Now, I ask again it the control he referred to in the first section is not the jurisdiction, the territorial jurisdiction, the sovereignty and right to construct a canal over that zone, and if it does not refer to the property rights, the ownership of the land, the harbors, the coast line, or the beds of the rivers? Am I correct?

I get no answer, and I will assume that I am correct; and my information of the classic inquire from more who much to have information, after close inquiry from men who ought to know, says that that is so. So that this protocol which floats in the air and which is not a protocol, looks toward this sum, as the gentleman informs us, of six and one-half millions for control of a strip of land 3 miles on each side, and an indefinite appropriation.

Now, let us go a step further. The gentleman said that this bill was very general. It is general. The gentleman has talked about Trojan horses and all that kind of thing. We used to have a saying sometimes in school, "The fox was the finder." Let us see about the Trojan horses. [Laughter.] Turn over to 2 and read this indefinite appropriation. It is as follows: Turn over to section

And such sum as may be necessary to secure such control is hereby ap-copriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Five hundred millions if necessary or one hundred millions if necessary.

Now, section 2. Listen:

That when the President has secured full control-it is not full control over in the first section; it was then "control" simply-

That when the President has secured full control over the territory in section I referred to he shall direct the Secretary of War to excavate and construct the canal.

Does "full control" mean there the purchase of the ownership by condemnation or otherwise of great blocks of real estate in that zone? Does it contemplate the purchase or condemnation of land owned by speculators, and I think I have the right to say in a large part both Americans and Nicaraguans? Is anybody prepared to answer that question? If so, I will stop and let him stand up and answer.

Where is this committee, if you choose—and I speak of it cor-where is this committee, if you choose—and I speak of it correctly—that spent so many sleepless nights, as mentioned by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS], on this matter?

Mr. CUMMINGS. My speech is printed, and the gentleman will not find that expression in it.

Mr. CANNON. Then I withdraw the remark. [Laughter.]

Now, how much is to be paid for full control? Is it wise to amend this bill and say how much? Have we any information upon that point? Oh save the gentleman anyhody that makes as upon that point? Oh, says the gentleman, anybody that makes an observation, or moves an amendment, or asks a question, is a confounded obstructionist against the best interests of the country. [Laughter.]

Oh, gentlemen, guard our legislation as best we can in this the hour of its inception and birth, through the decades when we are out of this House and others come after us there will be much criticism as to the administration of the measure under the most favorable circumstances. Take your Pacific railroads. Why, I have heard passion torn to tatters and days lengthen into weeks, and I have seen the reputations of great statesmen and great mea broken down because in the inception of these great measures they were not properly guarded. It was passed with a whoop and a hurrah.

Is there a sentiment for an isthmian canal? Yes. Is there a sentiment for such time being taken, and such consideration being given, and such questions asked, and such questions answered as to enable this the greatest legislative body on earth to proceed intelligently? Yes; the country wants an isthmian canal, but it demands the best action possible at our hands.

Now, I will make this observation: In my judgment, under the general appropriation and the power which is artfully—I say artfully—given it would be claimed, if this bill were enacted into law to day, that it carries such an appropriation that the President to-day, that it carries such an appropriation that the President can not only pay Costa Rica and Nicaragua, but can go on and without limit pay the successors of the Maritime Canal Company, pay the American speculator, and the Nicaraguan speculator, and the European speculator such prices as in his discretion may seem proper; and no man can tell whether that will be $10,000,000, $25,000,000, or $50,000,000. Mr. SHACKLEFORD.

Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman answer a question Mr. CANNON. Certainly, if I can.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Does the gentleman know whether the Maritime Canal Company owns any real estate which would require to be taken for this proposed route?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; I have been told that it has gone into bankruptcy and that its assets have been closed out or are to be closed out. The best information that I can get is that somewhere denoing around in the rele mornheams [Janghter] there where, dancing around in the pale moonbeams [laughter], there is somebody who has got a claim to a "bee" course down there that would ripen into valuable property in the light of this appropriation. [Laughter.] propriation.

Now gentlemen say, what shall we do? I had the honor the other day to make a suggestion that perhaps the consideration of this bill could profitably be postponed and made the special order thirty days from now or sixty days from now. I am informed by the chairman of this committee that a protocol is passing back and forth—not yet concluded, but trying to be—not yet a treaty, but trying to be. [Laughter.] I would like to see that treaty in order to know to what it commits the American people and the American Treasury. I believe we can see it before the close of this session of Congress.

I have given goatlewest to interpret the about this in

I have given gentlemen a chance to interrupt me about this indefinite appropriation, and no man has spoken. I will just anticipate. If this general indefinite appropriation should not be sufficient, after we have got the territorial jurisdiction, to extinguish the title of private property in that zone, then how are you going to extinguish it? Let me say to gentlemen who are in such great haste to build the canal between now and sunrise to-morrow that if this appropriation is not available they will not make much by their haste, because, under the laws of all countries, you can not take the property of a citizen without compensation. How much juries might give in condemnation proceedings under the sovereignty proposed to be retained by Nicaragua, heaven knows; I do not. Perhaps my friend can inform us. [Laughter.]

Now, if I could do just what I wanted to do, I would postpone the consideration of this bill for thirty days; and if by that time the protocol had not ripened into a treaty in black and white, so that the parties on the other side would be bound and would be bound if it ware adjusted then I would pass a resolution if be bound if it were adjusted, then I would pass a resolution, if be bound if it were adjusted, then I would pass a resolution, if necessary, either now or then, to hurry them up; and then before the adjournment of this Congress, when we saw "where we were at," I would legislate with apt and proper guards.

Now, another matter. This bill confessedly—to say nothing about this territory and the compensation to speculators—this bill confessedly authorizes an expenditure of $190,000,000. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Lacey] said, "Oh, that is nothing." Well, I agree with the gentleman from Iowa that an isthmian canal is to be constructed whether it shall cost $190,000,000 or $300,000,000; but I will not knowingly and willfully make the cost $300,000,000 if by the exercise of common business sense, from a patriotic and economic standpoint, the cost can be kent from a patriotic and economic standpoint, the cost can be kept down to $200,000,000. That is all I am claiming. If I were su-preme, I would postpone this measure for thirty days, and then see the condition of things.

Now one other matter. This bill authorizes contracts for the Now, one other matter. This bill authorizes contracts for the whole thing. I am now going to talk a minute or two to the other side of the House. We have our troubles over on this side. [Laughter.] I know the function of a minority quite well. I have been in a minority. And I know you are going to blow the trumpet loud and strong in the coming canvass, and perhaps not interficient replace the research of the re trumpet loud and strong in the coming canvass, and perhaps not ineffectively, unless the revenues coming into the Treasury under existing legislation are decreased. I think there is somewhat of a sentiment on this side among most of us to decrease them. If I had power this minute I would take off every cent of the so-called war taxation. [Applause.] How about that in view of this bill? An indefinite appropriation to extinguish the title and secure the right of way, and then full power to contract; and besides, a direct appropriation of $10,000,000.

If this legislation is to pass, the Treasury will, in my judgment, stand an appropriation considerable in amount to begin with. But I think, while authority to contract ought to be given, with stand an appropriation considerable in amount to begin with. But I think, while authority to contract ought to be given, with it ought to go legislation, so that from time to time as work is performed, in the absence of appropriation, the Secretary of the Treasury or the President may be authorized to issue 2 per cent bonds at not less than par. Then, if we have the revenue, we can appropriate; if not, the expenditure will be provided for. But I will say to my Republican friends that I do not want to have it thrown in my teeth ten days or thirty days from now, "You have not only got your river and harbor matters to provide for, and not only got your river and harbor matters to provide for, and your subsidy matters, and your public building matters, and a growing country, so that no man can tell what the expenditures are to be; and therefore legislation for the reduction of the revenue is not indicated."

If to talk about these matters makes me guilty of treason, I suppose I must stand it. I have had the habit for over a quarter of a century of "speaking out in meeting." When I have had anything I wanted to say I have said it. And I have found during these years that a generous constituency, while they have not always agreed with me, have agreed with me most of the time.

Now, one word as to the Morris amendment. In the event that this bill is not amended somewhat along the lines that I have been discussing—and I will say that I will vote for the Morris amendment, and if that is defeated, then, if I can be recognized, I will at the proper time move to recommit this bill with instructions amendment, and if that is defeated, then, if I can be recognized, I will at the proper time move to recommit this bill with instructions to be recognized. tions, embodying what seems to me to be proper instructions, to the committee to report back a bill in harmony with those instructions in or before thirty days. Then they can do it at once, or to-morrow, or at any other time, if that motion should be

A word now as to the Panama route. I do not care anything about the Panama route or the Nicaragua route or any other route across that Isthmus, except as it will give the people of the United States and the world the best possible canal at the least possible cost. I have no pride in this route or that. I have read the summing up of the Commission with some care. I have dog-eared and glanced through this report. We all have our duties to perform upon our various committees, touching the various matters that come within our respective jurisdictions, so that we have to go with a hop, skip, and a jump when we come to decide touching other matters, frequently. I have read this report with some care and I want to say now, without prejudice and without partisanship, that when I read the report of the Commission I said that while it recommended Nicaragua under all the conditions, in fact it was a report for the Panama route, if we could get it for $40,000,000. I do not believe any unprejudiced man can read it to the contrary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. CANNON. I thank the House.
Mr. DAYTON. Don't you want more time?
Mr. CANNON. I should like one minute.
Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman

Mr. MANN. I ask thanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] be allowed to proceed for five minutes. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that some confusion has already arisen with regard to matters of time. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] claims that on yesterday he reserved his time, and now claims the time. If that is granted, why of course the general debate will have to proceed indefinitely, and the Chair has no opinion or desire in regard to it.

Mr. MANN. I hope the request that I made may be submitted to the committee

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. Cannon] may proceed with his argument for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Now, just a word in conclusion. I do not know whether the Panama Company, having authority to sell the Panama Canal, have made an offer or not. The public prints say that they either have or are ready to do so. I do say that from the public prints and the best information I can get, I am inclined to the belief that under the existing conditions that company, or the people who own it and can make the title to it good, are ready to take $40,000,000 for it. In the light of the report and recommendations of this Commission, if that is so it is worthy of consideration without an accusation of treason. so it is worthy of consideration without an accusation of treason. That is what I say. It is true there are other things to be done if they are willing to sell to us. There is a concession to be had from the United States of Colombia. I now say, measuring my words, after inquiry of an authority which I am satisfied is good, that it is just as easy and just as practicable and just as speedy to make an agreement with Colombia, if the United States can buy this canal for $40,000,000, as it is to make the agreement with Nicaragua and Costa Rica. The perfect truth is, as I am informed, that all these States are desirous of having the canal, and at the same time they are desirous of getting all they can out at the same time they are desirous of getting all they can out of it.

Now, if greed and desire for great profit are Anglo-Saxon traits, then our Latin friends, if I am correctly informed, are a long way upon the road toward a high civilization. [Laughter.] We ought to be exactly fair. If the Morris amendment is adopted, then the same authority would exist toward that route that exists toward this route. I think from the standpoint of a proper commencement, in the best interests of a canal, from the standpoint of extinguing an intelligent extinguished the United of satisfying an intelligent sentiment throughout the United States and the world, that we ought to give it consideration, if it be a proposition; and if it be not a proposition, then we ought to pause long enough in our headlong course to see to it that in this exceedingly general bill twenty-five or fifty million dollars, more or less, is not wasted in the extinction of the title of private owners in the so-called zone that we are to acquire from these States.

[Applause.]
Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday, when 1 had finished speaking, I reserved my time, which was then announced to be eleven minutes. I reserved that for my colleague [Mr. DE ARMOND], and I ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to speak for eleven minutes, the time I reserved yesterday.
The CHAIRMAN.

The gentleman from Missouri SHACKLEFORD] asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. DE ARMOND] be allowed ten minutes' time for the purpose of general debate, and that the time for general debate be extended for ten minutes after half past two o'clock. Is there objection?

ten minutes after half past two o'clock. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, the proposition before the House at present, or that to which most of the speakers have addressed themselves, seems to my mind to be a very simple one. Yet apparently, to the apprehension of most of those who have spoken, it is very complicated. The question before the committee, before the House, and before the country is not whether this body will favor the building of a capal to connect the two occasions. body will favor the building of a canal to connect the two oceans, but what legislation upon that subject it will favor. It is not whether a canal bill should be passed, but whether a bill shall be matured and passed in good shape, according to the judgment of the body, or be rushed through the House without definite form or substance, in the hope or expectation that elsewhere, at the other end of the Capitol, it may be fashioned into something that will do to put into the statutes.

There is no opposition here, as I understand, to the passage of a bill for the building of a canal. Differences of opinion exist as to the route; and the first matter of contention which will arise, I suppose, when amendments are in order, will be as to whether the President shall be authorized to negotiate for any other route with any other people or nation than those mentioned in section 1 of the bill. At first blush it would seem that upon the other side of this House there would be no objection to enlarging the discretion of the President. It would seem that if patisan bias is to have weight, some such objection might be expected to come from this side of the House.

But the matter is one of business, and it seems to me that the preliminary question is, Have we confidence enough in the honesty of the President to trust him at all? It seems to me there can be no serious objection to trusting him to consider the different propositions submitted and to determine, in the light of such facts as he can discover and from such advice as will be forth-coming, whether he should negotiate with the Panama people or with Nicaragua and Costa Rica; whether he should arrange, in the interest of the people of the United States, to build upon one route or upon the other.

It has not been intimated, and I presume will not be, that the honesty of the President can be questioned. What will be lost in giving him the opportunity to make, and charging him with the duty of making, the best arrangement that he can make with either or any of these parties? His duty and opportunity will be enlarged by the amendment which my colleague [Mr. Shackle-FORD | will offer, if the House adopts it.

If the Nicaraguan is the best route, and if the President in his discretion shall think so, what harm can come from the authorization given to him to consider also the other route? It will at least enable him to exercise his judgment if he is not confined or tied to one particular route. It will enable him also to make better terms with the Nicaraguan and Costa Rican people.

The undertaking is a great one; it involves enormous expenditures and extends over a considerable period of time and will be a monumental work if undertaken wisely and carried forward vigorously and honestly. Engineers differ as to which is the better route. Speaking for myself, I am unable to determine which is the better, and I am free to admit that there is no humiliation in the confession that I do not know. Gentlemen who have studied this question and investigated it for months and years are in doubt. Under such circumstances, why not leave the President free to learn what is the best that can be done, and to do it?

For my part I am willing to trust him with this discussion and clothe him with this power. I do not believe there is risk in doing it. If we are willing to trust him to buy a right of way on the Nicaragua route, why not trust him also with the optional power and authority to procure the right of way, the franchises, and the work done on the Panama Canal? I can not understand the reason of this opposition. Is it pride in the paternity of the bill? Is it admiration for its artistic structure? Is it a desire to carry down to a posterity far distant the name of some committee or some gentleman?

The name or names will go better freighted and better conveyed if connected with a bill serving well the purposes of the people than with one merely rushed through the House to be thrown into the wastebasket of the Senate. The bill ought to be very carefully drawn. In my judgment, this bill is crude in many particulars. Not a word is said as to how we are to pay for the canal; not a word about who is to construct it or who is to expressing its all is wayne and shedowy.

the canal; not a word about who is to construct it or who is to supervise it; all is vague and shadowy.

Are the engineers of the Army and Navy, many of them with no other employment, to be engaged in this great work? We do not know anything about it. Is it to be done by contract, with one set of men or syndicate, extending in influence balefully and surely over the country, or is it to be through many syndicates? Is the civil-service law to prevail, or is it to be a partisan scheme for partisan purposes? The bill discloses nothing at all about these things, though it ought to be explicit and well guarded. There ought not to be holes in it and through it. There ought not to be bad possibilities about it, easily provided against.

It is suggested sometimes that those who criticise this meas-

It is suggested sometimes that those who criticise this measure and are not willing to canonize anything or everything that comes from the committee are opposed to building the canal. It is hardly worth while to advert to that criticism. I am one of a small minority who voted against the passage of a similar bill in the last Congress. I voted against it because I thought I was doing right in voting thus. Events since have fairly justified me and all those who voted the same way. We voted against it with a bad treaty with Great Britain pending over in the Senate, which has since been rejected, and ought to have been reate, which has since been rejected, and ought to have been rejected; but we could not know then that it would not be ratified.
The very fact that there was some opposition here, and a good deal over at the other end of the Capitol, has given us a better treaty, though not as good as we should have, and has brightened raised from subscriptions by the people of France—the men and very much the prospects of the country with respect to this canal.

I am not talking about what delay there ought to be for the fuller consideration of this matter. I believe the bill really ought to go back to the committee to be matured, and ought not to be passed immature—a mere scattering of words upon paper. There are many things that ought to be expressed which here are unexpressed. Whatever is done about it, I do not believe we should vote on the theory that there is something sacred about the bill; that there must not be a line touched; that precisely as it came from the committee it must go through. I do not believe that the bill should go through the House for the Senate to fix it. I the bill should go through the House for the Senate to fix it. I am tired of this loose and hurried legislating here, with the Senate to "fix" it afterwards. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I am in favor of legislating here as we think we ought to legislate. I am very glad that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] has expressed the belief that there ought to be full consideration of measures here. I hope he will not forget his theory, but that when the time comes, as come it will, soon and often, when there is denial here of expression that consideration and considers. there is denial here of opportunity for discussion and consideration, he will be as earnest then upon the same side as he is now.

[Mr. VANDIVER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee has kindly consented to add a few minutes to the time for which the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House has now recognized me, in order that I may give my views to the House. I re-nized me, in order that I may give my views to the House. I regret very much that I am laboring under a severe cold and can not speak so that I can be heard with ease throughout the Hall.

I want, however, to say, Mr. Chairman, in advance that I think it is the duty of this House as a legislative body to determine upon the route which this canal shall take. [Applause.] It should not shirk its responsibility by devolving its duties upon another department of the Government—the executive department—however were the its confidence in the insurable of the Breei. ever great may be its confidence in the incumbent of the Presidential chair.

Why do gentlemen wish to go behind the unanimous recom-Why do gentlemen wish to go behind the unanimous recommendation of the able Commission which, under the authority of this House, has examined this whole subject and, without a dissenting voice, recommended the Nicaraguan and Costa Rican route? We ought not to refer it to anybody to decide that question for us. I differ with the honorable and learned and very adroit chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and with my honorable friend from Missouri [Mr. De Armond] on this side of the Chamber when they say it is proper that the legislative deof the Chamber when they say it is proper that the legislative de-partment—the American House of Commons—which, under its partment—the American House of Commons—which, under as iron rules, has had its mouth shut for so many years, and still has it closed, should refer all questions of this sort to some other department—to some other branch of the National Government.

Sir, before the holiday recess of this session, on motion of my honorable friend, the chairman of this committee [Mr. Herburn], the House fixed last Tuesday for the consideration of what? The

the House fixed last Tuesday for the consideration of what? The bill now before the House; not any other bill. They fixed this time for the consideration of that measure. It has been before the American Congress for many years. Commission after commission of engineers, eminent in their profession, has been appointed, and appropriations have been made to pay their expenses. Delay after delay has occurred. Indeed, we are only repeating in this matter what occurred when the Suez Canal was projected by that great engineer and distinguished public man, Count Frederick De Lessens of France. England opposed that project and erick De Lesseps, of France. England opposed that project and intervened to prevent the beginning of the canal and its final completion.

But the great intellect of De Lesseps triumphed over all obstacles, and at last that canal was finished and is now open to the commerce of the world. In the prime of his great manhood, surcommerce of the world. In the prime of his great manhood, surrounded by distinguished men, supported and sustained by many of the ablest governments of the world, De Lesseps projected the Panama Canal. The first survey of that canal was made by Commander E. P. Hull, of our Navy, who surveyed and located the route from the Bay of Aspinwall, on the Caribbean Sea, to Panama, on the Pacific Ocean.

In 1879 Count De Lesseps called a convention or congress of all the maritime nations of the world to meet in Paris. They did meet in May, 1879. Twenty-four countries of maritime character were represented in that convention. They decided on a water.

ter were represented in that convention. They decided on a waterlevel canal from Lyman Bay to Panama. Immediately after the adjournment of that congress the Interoceanic Canal Company was organized, under French law, for building the canal under a concession granted previously to Lieut. N. B. Wise by the Government of Colombia. This concession was sold by Lieutenant Wise to the Count De Lesseps. At the close of the year 1888 the amount expended for the construction of the Panama Canal, women and children-was $224,000,000. At that time only one-third of the canal was completed.

Now, we say, Why should we desire to become the legatees who are to inherit, by descent or expensive purchase, the bankrupt Panama Canal, on which the French Government and the French people expended $224,000,000 for the completion of only one-third or one-fourth of the canal? Why should we want to repeat the experiment of our sister Republic, France, and put our millions into that bankrupt enterprise?

Why should we expose our laborers to the miasma of the Pan-ama route, where the lives of hundreds of thousands of laborers have already been sacrificed and millions of money expended? Even if we could be the heir to this concern without the payment of the proposed purchase money, $40,000,000, would it not be a "white elephant" on the hands of the American people? Do we want it at any price? Do we want to repeat the failure of the French people in constructing this canal? They proposed the con-

They proposed the constructing this canal. They proposed the construction of the canal on a water level between the two oceans. They probably would never be able to accomplish it.

The honorable gentleman on the other side of the Chamber [Mr. Cannon] says that he is in favor of a canal. Yes; but when, and how, and where? Is he not willing to say now where that canal should be? Why should not the Congress of the United States, the House of Representatives, be willing to say now, "We want a canal, and we want it at a particular point?" Why should we want to fall heir by descent or by expensive purchase to this Panama Canal, which is to-day a bankrupt institution? It passed into the hands of a receiver when De Lesseps failed. That receiver was a Frenchman, M. Monchiourt. He went to Panama and reported to the French Government and French people that in addition to the $224,000,000 which the canal had already cost, and only one-fourth completed, $600,000,000 more would be required to complete it. Do you want to fall heir to such a responsibility as that?

Are you willing to undertake what France has failed in, and what her engineers tell you will cost over $600,000,000, when we have a far better route? And when you talk about the distance, it must be remembered that 120 miles of the distance by the Nicaraguan and Costa Rican route is covered by water and does not have to be excavated. On the Nicaraguan and Costa Rican route. if the Nicaragua Bay and Lake and the waters of the river be utilized by means of one dam, there could be secured an open passage

Why should we want now to buy this Panama Canal? Why is it that my honorable friend from Illinois, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, has waited until now to throw the apple of discord into this House on a vague rumor that $40,000,000 would buy the rights of the French company? Why has he waited until now to throw this apple of discord into this House, when we have met to consider a grave proposition sanctioned by an expensive Commission that we have appointed and that has made a unanimous report—sanctioned by the committee presided over by my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], who have prepared this bill?

We are considering a proposition which does not look to the benefit of the coast country alone. This is a proposition to extend the mouth of the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean and to give us a commerce which will be drained from every single State that lies on that great internal sea, the Mississippi River. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] has expired.
Mr. HOOKER. I would like to know whether the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] will yield me some further time?
Mr. HEPBURN. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes of time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HOOKER. I wish to say, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that this proposition comes late in the day, when we have deliberately and unanimously voted to fix the time for the consideration of this bill. I take it for granted that the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. Cannon] voted with the House when it decided to fix last Tuesday for the beginning of the consideration of this bill. It was this bill that we were to

But now it is said that the Panama Canal Company—defunct as But now it is said that the Panama Canal Company—defunct as it is, in litigation, in the hands of a receiver, with its title very doubtful—wishes to dispose of its property to us. When it is said that we want to acquire that title, how are we to do it? The honorable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, said he would be willing to postpone for thirty or sixty days. Does he not know that neither in thirty days nor in sixty days can we ascertain whether the French Government, the French people, and the French corporation can make a good title to this property? He knows full well that such a course would mean another delay of two years. He knows full well that there can be no adjustment of this matter. well that there can be no adjustment of this matter.

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, it is simply a newspaper report. Who has the title to this property? Who holds it? Will we not be surrounded by the very same difficulties in the Republic of Colombia as we are in acquiring the right of way from Costa Rica and Nicaragua?

It is said we can trust the President with regard to this Panama matter. But we know full well that if we are to pay even the relatively small sum of $40,000,000 we can not arrange it until we have had a thorough examination of the whole question and know

Not only has this company gone into bankruptcy and into the hands of a receiver with $224,000,000 of the French people's money sunk in it, but that great man who originated the Suez Canal and built it, Count De Lesseps, who originated the Panama Canal and failed in it, not only failed in the execution of the project, but in the prime of his old age he was seized upon by the officers of the French Covarment, taken from the besom of his interof the French Government, taken from the bosom of his interesting young family, his young wife and children, imprisoned, degraded, and charged with bribery and corruption in the use of the funds which the French people had raised. He went to his grave a broken-hearted man because the country from which he came and of which he was a citizen did not appreciate the great sacrifices of money, of health, and of reputation which he was willing to make for the advancement of his own people and all the world.

Are we now going to acquire this property at an enormous expense? No; this is a proposition again to delay this matter. This is a proposition against the Costa Rica and Nicaragua route. This is a proposition which is a mere promise to the ear, to be broken to the hope. We can not expect and do not expect that this question of these routes can be better considered at any other time than it can now be considered by the House of Representa-tives. Let us adopt the proposition as it comes from this com-mittee of ours, presided over by my able friend the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn]. Every State that lies on the border of that great internal waterway, the Mississippi River—aye, every State that lies on the border of the thousand tributaries that flow into that great internal waterway—is interested in the question of the construction of this canal, and will feel it as sensibly as the seacoast countries and the commerce of the Pacific. [Applause.] [Here the hammer fell.]

[Mr. HEPBURN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to acquire from the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, for and in behalf of the United States, control of such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua as may be desirable and necessary on which to excavate, construct, and protect a canal of such depth and capacity as will be sufficient for the movements of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, from a point near Greytown, on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Brito, on the Pacific Ocean; and such sum as may be necessary to secure such control is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Amend section 1, by striking out all after the word "Nicaragua," in lines 4 and 5 of page 1, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Or from the United States of Colombia, subject to the provise hereinafter contained, for and in behalf of the United States, control of such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua, or to the United States of Colombia, as may be desirable and necessary on which to excavate, construct, and protect a canal of such depth and capacity as will be sufficient for the movement of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, from a point near Greytown, on the Caribbean Sea, it a point near Greytown, on the Caribbean Sea, to a point near Panama, on the Pacific Ocean: Provided. That the political and territorial rights and privileges acquired from the United States of Colombia shall be equally as favorable and desirable asany that can be acquired from the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, and at no greater cost to the United States: And provided further, That the Panama Canal, so far as constructed, and all the rights, privileges, and franchises, together with all the works, railways (including the Panama Railway), telegraph or telephone lines, buildings, lands, plant, materials, drawings, documents, and property of every description whatever belonging thereto or connected-therswith, or owned or controlled by any corporation, association, or individual in connection with or relating to the construction thereof, can be acquired by the United States, free and clear of all incumbrance or claim of any nature from any corporation, association, or person or persons whatsoever for a reasonable sum, not to exceed $40,000,000, within six months from the passage of this act, and such sum as may be necessary to secure such control is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, in the general debate I gave notice that I would offer an amendment to the pending measure. A similar notice was given by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Parker] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MORRIS]. We three have conferred and find there is no difference in the principle in the amendments we have severally suggested, but only a difference of mode of expression. It was therefore agreed that I should offer this amendment at this time on behalf of them and myself.

Mr. Chairman, in offering this amendment, I want to be especially understood as doing it without any purpose of delay. On the contrary, I assert that giving to the President of the United States the alternative as to these two routes will be conducive to dispatch rather than delay. Why should it not be in the alternative?

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] has read from the Democratic platform adopted at Kansas City, and warned us that it declares in favor of the Nicaragua route and admonishes us to stand by it.

I read a long time ago, Mr. Chairman, "Beware of the Greeks bearing gifts." When there is no oracle left to arouse the Democratic party than the stalwart Republican from the State of Iowa, the Democrats are in a sad plight.

He read us the declaration of the Kansas City platform, which named the Nicaraguan route, but, as it was understood at that time, was used as synonymous with Isthmian. The gentleman from Lowa can not come here with such a play on works as that time, was used as synonymous with Istamian. The gentleman from Iowa can not come here with such a play on words as that and frighten us from our plain duty. "It is the eye of childhood that fears a painted devil."

Why should we not build the Panama Canal if proper arrangements can be made? The gentleman says we can not tell the multitudinous million dollars of expense that will be entailed. Why can we not? This amendment limits the amount to $40,-000,000 to secure not only the territorial but the political rights; the rights of individuals and corporations must all be obtained for $40,000,000. If it can not be obtained for that, the President is not authorized to accept it.

One other point. The President of the United States occupies his seat and exercises the functions of his office to-day, Mr. Chairman, without any vote of mine. The gentleman from Iowa supman, without any vote of mine. The gentleman from Iowa supported him. Is he now unwilling to trust him? Can it be said that if we give the President of the United States the right to choose between these two routes he will be subject to the temptations of which the gentleman from Iowa speaks? Are we to be informed by the great Republican leader from Iowa that we can not trust the President of the United States lest these influences may tempt him to make an improper selection? That is the substance of what he says, that temptations will be thrown out. To whom? To the President of the United States, for he, and alone will be clothed with the discretion conferred by this amendaalone, will be clothed with the discretion conferred by this amend-

Will the gentleman from Iowa tell us that we must not give him the discretion between these two routes because of sinister influence which may tempt him? We do not declare in favor of influence which may tempt him? We do not declare in favor of the Panama route, we do not declare in favor of the Nicaragua route; we give the President power to choose between them. He says that "authorize" means "shall," and that if the President takes steps to secure the Panama route that the terms in this bill will bind us and bind him to proceed with it. If that be true, then the same language contained in this bill will bind us to the Nicaragua route.

He says that in another session of Congress we can undo what we have done in this if the Panama route should be found most desirable. Why should we to-day enter upon legislation with the deliberate intention to repeal it at some future Congress? That is what they ask us to do. They ask us to come here to-day and vote for a measure and put it upon the statute books of the country, with the understanding that at the next session of Congress the probabilities are that we shall repeal every line and letter of it. Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. Is it an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. WHITE. No, sir; an amendment to the original bill. The CHAIRMAN. That would not be in order now. Mr. WHITE. Then I offer it as an amendment to the amend-

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by adding, after the word "Nicaragua," "or the State through which the canal is to be constructed."

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, the vast importance of the ques-Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, the vast importance of the questions presented by the bill and amendments under consideration has very naturally caused a wide range in the discussion, since the subject speaks its own importance, embracing in its scope the commercial and in some respects the material welfare of the United States, with corresponding benefits to all other nations.

Vast expenditures are to be made to construct this work, reaching to the hundred millions. Much time is required, at least something like a half score of years, under the most favorable progress. The capal to connect the two oceans and which will progress. The canal to connect the two oceans, and which will bring about new conditions and greater stimulant in the com-merce of the world, must be constructed across that comparatively narrow neck of land in Central America, or at the northern part of South America, which connects North and South

In the past attention has been called to the necessity of this waterway, and at times estimates have been made of the cost. The time has now arrived, it seems, when the people of the United States demand that actual steps be taken to construct this work. The report of the Commission is before us, and the bill is presented by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, based upon its recommendations, and amendments are offered looking to more perfect plans and greater certainty in securing the best route. It has been well said, indeed, that in this great the best route. It has been well said, indeed, that in this great work, in which hundreds of millions of our treasures must be expended, we are entitled to the best route. The people of the United States and the demands of commerce will be satisfied with nothing less. The serious question, therefore, is, Which is the best route? This we are not absolutely called upon to determine at present, and I consider it a fortunate circumstance that the decision of this vital question may well be deferred to the time of the actual acquisition of the property and franchise rights necessary for either route.

The amendments proposed do no violence to legislative powers by undue delegation of authority, and neither does the original bill. The powers conferred in each are the same. In the bill power is given to acquire the necessary rights and commence the power is given to acquire the necessary rights and commence the construction. In the amendments power is given to acquire the same rights and commence the work. The only difference is in the original bill the right is confined to one way; in the amendments the right may be exercised as to either of two ways. The President is allowed in the amendments the discretion, with the advice of the Commission, in acquiring the necessary rights to still select that way which, upon the whole case, shall appear the most feasible and practicable. In other words, the amendments do not confine the President to the one way alone, like the original bill does.

As a business proposition, looking to securing the rights to be acquired at reasonable costs, but, more than all, looking to the securing of the best route, the amendments, in my view, should certainly be adopted. They do not conflict with the main object in view. In fact, they give aid to it by allowing a chance in selection, besides allowing the desirable feature of finally selecting the location which in every way will insure the greatest advantages.

It is not my intention to go into a discussion of the questions which may be necessary to determine which is the best of these two routes. It is sufficient to remark that the report of the Commission itself does not undertake to definitely determine this question. It sets forth alternative advantages in the one route and the other. It states, what we all knew before, that the Nicaraguan route is by far the greater in distance, and sets forth many other disadvantages to be encountered in its construction, such as a lack of harbors at each end, a greater number of locks to be made and maintained, greater cost of construction by over $45,000,000, greater cost of maintenance by $1,300,000 annually, greater number of persons, of course, to protect and operate the system, greater elevation to be passed, and longer time and greater danger in the transit of vessels. But it states that sanitary conditions appear to favor this route.

When these disadvantages are stated in the Nicaraguan route, it would seem that they embrace nearly all that materially relate to those questions which should determine the selection. It is not my purpose to criticise the work of the Commission. It is the work of men of high character and scientific attainments. But I may be permitted to suggest that there appears to be a doubt that their conclusions in recommending the Nicaraguan route logically follow from their premises

It was a weighty suggestion made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Bromwell] when he stated that the Nicaraguan way can never be made a sea-level canal and that the Panama route can, if the demands of commerce in the near or remote future shall require it. This consideration, in my judgment, should be taken in view, because in the great advances of business and commerce it may occur, and that not far in the future, that means of passage in this waterway shall be improved. Another consideration intimately connected here is that if we should adopt the route offering the greatest and most expensive barriers to commerce another nation or nations may seize the opportunity and con-struct the superior route, thereby rendering our work and our expenses almost, if not quite, useless.

I shall therefore heartily support the amendments, firmly convinced that they make the plan more perfect and insure finally the location of this work at the point which will bring about the real object sought—the best, the cheapest, and only practicable waterway through the American continent. But if these amendments fail, and we shall thereby be deprived of the chance of attaining this great end then I will yet for the original hill, but taining this great end, then I will vote for the original bill; but in doing so I wish to declare and avow that I do so with the greatest misgivings and fears, amounting to almost the certainty of conviction, that all of our expenditures, all of our labor and vast work on the only way offered in the original bill, will turn out to be a gigantic work of failure and mistake, to be shown by future events. [Applause.] The CHAIRMAN.

Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr.

WHITE] insist on his amendment or withdraw it? Mr. WHITE. I withdraw it.

Mr. WHITE. I withdraw it.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have not heard in the course of this discussion any gentleman on the floor of this House state that the people of the United States are opposed to a canal. On the other hand, it seems to be conceded by all that the people of the country, who are to pay the bills, want a canal built. Now, why do they want a canal built? Is it a mere idle sentiment for which they want to spend a hundred or two hundred million dollars, or have they in view some practical purpose? Unquestionably we or have they in view some practical purpose? Unquestionably we recognize that there is a practical purpose, and that purpose is but one. They desire to promote the transportation facilities of the world. They desire to bring water transportation in compethe world. They desire to bring water transportation in compe-tition with the great transcontinental railroads of this country, in order that freight rates upon the heavier products of the country may come down in order that the manufacturing products and the agricultural products of the country may more readily and more cheaply reach the markets for which they are destined.

Now, if that is the reason that the people of the United States want this canal built, then should we vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, or should we vote for the original proposition contained in this bill?

I think there is not a gentleman on this floor who would for a moment hesitate, if a proposition were made to build a railroad through his town or city, to vote a bonus of $100,000 for such a road; but, on the other hand, if he were asked to vote $100,000 bonus for the construction of a railroad 100 miles south of his town, he would recognize the question as very different. the one case his town would receive a direct return for the bonus given, because of the increased transportation facilities, while on the other hand the bonus would be given without anything in return.

Now, what is the condition of the question here? We all know— the report shows—that if we expend the money for building the Panama Canal the direct line for vessels passing through that canal to the Atlantic ports of this country or to the ports of northern Europe would be through the Caribbean Sea. The line northern Europe would be through the Caribbean Sea. The line of transit will be hundreds of miles south of your coast line. Those vessels are not going to stop at New Orleans, from which the great treasures of the Mississippi Valley could be carried on their journey to foreign ports. They will not stop at Mobile or Pensacola. They will not stop at any American port unless they are directly ordered there. On the other hand, if you build a canal by the Nicaraguan route, the direct line for those vessels to follow in going to the Atlantic ports or European ports would be through the Gulf of Mexico. They would come right to the door of New Orleans, where all the products of the great States of the Mississippi Valley would be emptied. They would come to the door of Mobile and Pensacola and would take from there your products, competing with the railroads and lessening freight rates to our constituents. rates to our constituents

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlemen from Alabama has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent to proceed five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, for these reasons, as a practical business proposition, I say we should adopt the Nicaraguan route in preference to the Panama route, even if the canal by the Panama route could be built at less cost or in less time. though we might and would derive benefits from an isthmian canal, no matter where it might be built, the great benefit which the States of the Mississippi Valley and the Gulf might expectfrom a canal would be lost to us if we should reject the Nicaraguan route and adopt the Panama route. Therefore, I say that for the benefit of the country we should adopt this bill as it stands, regardless of what may be the merits of the other proposition.

But when we come to consider the merits of the Panama route, when that project comes to us from the French people laden with the scandals of two decades, are we to go before the world accepting this heritage from another nation, a project enveloped and weighed down by scandals that at one time almost overthrew the French Government? On the other hand, we know that the proposition to build the Nicaragua Canal is a clear, straight proposition to build six locks and to move so many feet of ground.

Now, when we come to the question what we owe to the country, what we owe to the people, I agree thoroughly with the gentleman from Iowa and I disagree entirely with my friend from Missouri. My friend from Missouri says that the statement of the gentleman from Iowa that the Democratic party had pledged its followers to vote for the Nicaragua route is a mere fiction—that the words Nicaraguan Canal and Isthmian Canal are synonymous terms.

Why, my friend from Missouri overlooked the fact entirely that the Democratic platform was written after the Republican platform was written, and that it expressly criticised the action of the Republican party in convention assembled because of the fact that it was attempting to dillydally with this question; that it was not honest in its proposition to build an isthmian canal; that the Republican convention had put in their platform a proposition to build an isthmian canal merely for the purpose of delay. That is what our party said in convention assembled, and they said that if we had been commissioned with power to act in this matter we would build the canal now, and we would build the Nicaragua Canal. I say, how can any man stand on this side of the House, pledging his allegiance to the Democratic platform and to a Democratic constituency, and say that he has kept faith with that platform and that constituency by doing exactly what the Republican platform advocated and what our national convention criticised it for advocating? [Applause on the Demo-

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I hope I may have the attention of the House so that I can be heard for a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending proposition is exhausted; but the Chair will recognize the gentleman to make a formal amendment.

Mr. MORRIS. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Of the amendment? Mr. MORRIS. Of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday, in explaining the amendment or proviso which I submitted to the House day before yesterday, I stated that it was done at that time for the purpose of suggesting the idea which I had in my mind, and so that the House might debate the proposition and fully understand it before it was formally offered at the proper time. The amendment which the gentleman from Missouri has offered embodies the first part of the proviso that I offered, the part which comes in its logical place as an amendment to the first section. in its logical place as an amendment to the first section.

I may state here that there will also be an amendment to the second section, which will embody the balance of the proposition which I submitted and which has now been fully discussed. I call attention to the fact that on yesterday I stated that there might be inaccuracies and possibly ambiguities in that proviso as first drawn; but in the final draft I have anticipated every objection which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] has suggested to-day as to its uncertainty. A part of this final draft is the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Missouri, and the other part will be offered as an amendment to the second section, where it properly belongs, in order to be in harmony with the balance of the bill.

The first section of this bill relates to the concessions from the countries through which this canal is to pass, and this amendment embodies the part of my proviso which dealt with that subject. The second section relates to the construction of the canal, and the amendment which will be offered to that section, which amendment I have here before me, will embody the bal-ance of my proviso in that part of the bill and thus make it har-

The object of this amendment is to leave the hands of the President untied in his negotiations with regard to the concessions for a canal, so binding him, however, that in dealing with the United States of Colombia he shall be obliged at the same time to obtain from all parties having any interest in the Panama Canal scheme a release of all their rights, privileges, and franchises, and get a title free and clear of every incumbrance what-

The second amendment, which will be offered at the proper time, will deal with the construction, and while not changing the authority to build the Nicaragua Canal, yet will, if proper concessions from the Government of Colombia and a clear title to the property of the Panama Canal people can be obtained, and the Isthmian Canal Commission shall so advise, authorize the President, in his discretion, to construct the canal on the Panama line. The whole proposition contained in my original amendment or proviso is embodied in these two amendments, and this amendment is offered here because it is the proper place for it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How long a time must elapse before it can be definitely known when this work can begin?

Mr. MORRIS. I did not quite understand the gentleman's

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Minne-sota please explain what the six months' limitation is in the proposed amendment?

Mr. MORRIS. The words are, I think, exact and perfectly plain in their meaning. The six months' limitation is from the time of the passage of this act. The President has six months from the time of the passage of this act to carry on and complete these negotiations. If at the end of that time the negotiations shall have failed, then this bill, just as it has been drawn by the chair-man of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, will be in force and the preparations for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal can go on.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Permit me to inquire of the gentleman from Minnesota what he means by six months for negotiation? What negotiation?

Mr. MORRIS. For negotiation with the United States of Colombia and with the people who control this Panama Canal.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And Nicaragua, too.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Minnesota permit me to call his attention to the phraseology of the proposed amendment?

Mr. MORRIS. Certainly.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It contains two provises. I should like to call the attention of the committee to it, because it is very important:

Mr. MORRIS. "Provided further," it says, does it not? Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No.

"Provided, That the political and territorial rights and privileges acquired from the United States of Colombia shall be equally as favorable and desirable as any that can be acquired from the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragna and at no greater cost to the United States: And provided further, That the Panama Canal, so far as constructed, and all the rights, privileges, and franchises, together with all the works, railways (including the Panama Railway), telegraph or telephone lines, buildings, lands, plant, materials, drawings, documents, and property of every description whatever belonging thereto or connected therewith, or owned or controlled by any corporation, association, or individual in connection with or relating to the construction thereof can be acquired by the United States, free and clear of all incumbrance or claim of any nature, from any corporation, association, or person or persons whatsoever, for a reasonable sum, not to exceed $40,000,000, within six months from the passage of this act."—

The six months relates simply to the acquisition of the rights of the Panama Canal Company.

Mr. MORRIS. Oh, no.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin (reading):

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin (reading):

"And provided further, That the Panama Canal, so far as constructed, and all the rights, privileges, and franchises, together with all the works, railways (including the Panama Railway), telegraph or telephone lines, buildings, lands, plants, materials, drawings, documents, and property of every description whatever belonging thereto or owned or controlled by any corporation, association, or individual in connection with or relating to the construction thereof, can be acquired by the United States free and clear of all incumbrance or claim of any nature from any corporation, association, or person or persons whatsoever, for a reasonable sum, not to exceed $40,000, within six months from the passage of this act; and such sum as may be necessary to secure such control is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Now, then, let me ask the gentleman from Minnesota a ques-on. That gives the Panama Canal Company six months in which to make a price which can be accepted by them, and they may make it in the last month of the six.

Mr. MORRIS. Does the gentleman ask a question or put his own construction upon it?

Mr. COOPER of Wiscensin. It is only the last proviso which contains the words "six months," and the other proviso is expressly excluded from it. The six months relate simply to the acquisition of the property of the Panama Canal Company. It so expressly declares, it is expressly in the clause for that purpose, and under all the statutory constructions of which I am informed the words "six months" relate only to this proviso. That being so, let me ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman from Minnesota-

Mr. MORRIS. If this is not to come out of my time.

that under that last proviso the Panama Canal Company has six months' time in which to negotiate with the United States for the transfer of its property?

Mr. MORRIS. The language does not bear any such construc-

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And then, after that has been acquired, you continue in the language of the report of the Commission, which is to this effect—
Mr. MORRIS. Is that a question or an assertion?
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will say this to the gentleman from Minnesota, that if he can make it appear that I am not giving his proviso a fair construction I will vote for his amendment. Now, we find in the report:

If the Panama route is selected these concessions must be removed in order that the two Republics may enter into a treaty to enable the United States to acquire the control upon the Isthmus that will be necessary, and to fix the consideration.

Now, then, this six months having expired, it would be a treaty for the property. And would not a treaty have to be made with the Government after that?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is so much confusion that we can not hear. The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. Gentlemen will resume their seats. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Minnesota has occupied ten minutes, and the gentleman from Wisconsin has occupied a liberal share of that ten minutes. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from

Minnesota for five minutes. [Applause.]
Mr. MORRIS. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Wisconsin will send me back the copy of my draft which I lent him I will try to explain to the House just what I think it means. I am glad to hear the gentleman from Wisconsin state that if the objections which he suggests are removed he will be glad to vote for the amendment. This amendment as it has been drawn gives the President six months in which "to acquire" this property.

That is what it does.

That is what it does.

I do not know how much of that time will be consumed, but I do know that under this amendment, if the six months is up before the property is "acquired" and clear of every incumbrance, the Nicaragua Canal will go on; and that is the only construction the language of this amendment could bear. "That the Panama Canal, * * * and all the rights, privileges, and franchises, etc., can be acquired by the United States." That is it. If the ownership can be changed in six months, if the property can be acquired within the six months, then we may build on the Panama line. ama line.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment for

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment for an interruption?

Mr. MORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. With respect to the six months for acquiring the property. That can only be done by treating with the Republic of Colombia after the company has authorized the Republic to make the treaty. Does the gentleman think it means that the treaty shall be ratified within six months, or that the treaty shall be obtained into within six months? be entered into within six months?

Mr. MORRIS. That the whole transaction shall be closed up within six months. That is what the language of this resolution

Mr. MANN. Then it is idle.
Mr. MORRIS. Possibly so.
Mr. BOWIE. The gentleman knows that it is utterly impossible to settle so complicated a matter as the Panama scheme in six months.

I do not. I think it very doubtful whether it Mr. MORRIS. I do not. I think it very doubtful whether it can be done in that time, and have frankly said so. But I do say this: That the greatest interests on the face of the earth for the United States of Colombia are involved in this proposition, and I say that all the property and every interest of the Panama Company are involved in it. I say, further, that if these amendments are put into this bill the Colombian Government and the Panama Company will be put to it to get a hustle on themselves and get through with the business. These amendments forbid any further delay. The whole transaction must be closed up in six months. That is what the language means. There can be no question about it.

Now, some gentleman may say that this is impossible of accomplishment. They know full well that the interests of Colombia and of all these corporations and persons interested, whether it be by holding bonds or stock, are so inextricably bound together that they must move together. If the negotiations with the Panama Canal Company and the people having an interest in it can not be closed up and the property acquired in six months, that is the end of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has no time.

Now, the amendment which will be offered to the second secMr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman not think tion will carry the other part. It will authorize the President, in his discretion, to choose the Panama route if the Canal Commission shall so recommend [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee, in the first place, to the language in the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission which I read yesterday. I do not suppose that this amendment is introduced for the purpose of delay, but in my opinion it will result in serious delay not only to the Nicaragua Canal, but to any isthmian

Now, the Commission says in its report, speaking of the Government of Colombia:

The Government of Colombia, on the contrary, in whose territory the Panama route lies, has granted concessions which belong to or are controlled by the New Panama Canal Company and have many years to run. These concessions, limited in time and defective in other ways, would not be adequate authority for the purposes of the United States, but while they exist Colombia is not free to treat with this Government. If the Panama route is selected, these concessions must be removed in order that the two Republics may enter into a treaty to enable the United States to acquire the control upon the isthmus that will be necessary and to fix the consideration.

So that it is absolutely necessary before anything can be done toward starting a canal on the Panama route that a treaty shall be entered into and completed between the Government of Colom-bia and the Republic of the United States. The Commission has so declared in its report.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will pardon me, I think the gentleman is in error, and I think a single suggestion will show it. Under the terms of this bill if enacted into law as amended, or without amendment, the President is authorized and would be by both the House and the Senate, by positive ized, and would be by both the House and the Senate, by positive provision of law, to make the purchase of the property designated, and no treaty is necessary. I speak of that after inquiry at headquarters.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But the Commission has unanimously reported—

Mr. CANNON. We are not bound by that. It is a question of law. We are bound by the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Commission says that as a matter of fact, not as a matter of law, there is a concession there which requires a treaty to be entered into between this Government and the Government of Colombia.

Now, I wish to call attention to the phraseology of this amendment. It contains two provisos. The first of these is as follows:

Provided, That the political and territorial rights and privileges acquired from the United States of Colombia shall be equally as favorable and desirable as any that can be acquired from the States of Costa Rico and Nicaragua and at no greater cost to the United States.

There is not a word said about six months.

There is not a word said about six months.

Mr. MORRIS. Will the gentlemen permit me an interruption?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. If the gentleman is afraid that the language "within six months" only applies to the last proviso, a simple amendment offered by him at the end of the first part will make it so certain that nobody can misunderstand it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin permit me a suggestion?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentieman from wisconsin permit me a suggestion?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Are not the two propositions connected by the conjunction "and?"

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And does not that hitch them together?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think not in the sense you

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then the conjunction which ordinarily connects, in this case does not connect? [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not think that any fair interpretation of the language would hold that the words "within six months" apply to both provisos.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SIMS. I move to amend by striking out the last two words. Mr. SIMS. I move to amend by striking out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Morris], and so long as that amendment is not withdrawn debate is closed.

Mr. MORRIS. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SIMS. I move to amend by striking out the last two words.
Mr. Chairman, I have heard the Democratic party charged by the Republicans with a great many very foolish things, but I have never heard them charged by the Republican party with so foolish a thing as that which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] charged upon us a few moments ago. I refer to that gentleman's construction of a plank in the Democratic platform referring to this subject. That plank reads as follows:

We favor the immediate construction, ownership, and control of the Nicaraguan Canal by the United States; and—

we denounce the insincerity of the plank in the Republican platform for an isthmian canal, in the face of the failure of the Republican majority to pass such a bill in Congress.

The gentleman from Alabama gets up here and reads this declaration as a direction to us to vote for a particular canal, in the sense of excluding us from voting for any other. That is the most unreasonable contention that I have ever yet heard from anybody. It is just as if the gentleman should say that if the platform spoke of locks and dams being 40 feet high we must vote against any bill that provided for locks 41 feet high or 39 feet high. Such a contention is preposterous.

feet high. Such a contention is preposterous.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. If it is true that in the Democratic platform the word "Nicaraguan" meant "isthmian," is it not possibly true that the word "silver" meant "gold?" [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. When, according to the Republican view, silver was made as good as gold, they might be treated as meaning the same thing. Can it be contended that if we decide that some other than the Nicaraguan route is as good or better the Democratic platform compels us to support only the Nicaraguan route? cratic platform compels us to support only the Nicaraguan route? I contend that no such idea could reasonably be drawn from that platform.

A criticism of the Republican party is made on account of their insincerity in failing to provide for an isthmian canal anywhere, the Nicaraguan route or any other. That language can not by any fair construction be treated as intended to be a condemnation any fair construction be treated as intended to be a condemnation of the Republican party by not favoring one particular line. On the contrary, a bill for that very route had passed this House by an enormous majority and died in the Senate. But, as everybody knows, the reason was that a treaty affecting this subject was then pending and had not been acted upon.

I want to say that I understand the Democratic party to be a party of great principles and not of little higgling details; and if it is better for the whole country that we should have this canal at Panama, let us have it there. If it is best to have it at Nicaragua, let us have it there. But, sir, the attempt to shake the red rag in our faces and say that we are not living up to party pledges, because we saw proper to denounce the insincerity of pledges, because we saw proper to denounce the insincerity of the Republican party for nonaction, can not move me a particle. I am going to vote for the amendment in the belief that it is best to give our Government the largest opportunity to secure the best route with a view to securing the best results to the country as a whole.

If the amendment be voted down, I am going to vote for the bill just as it is. I supported the bill in the last Congress. The Democratic party supports that which is best for the whole coun-Democratic party supports that which is destror the whole country; and loyalty to the party does not depend upon any question of locality or details of that kind. It seems to me that with two countries bidding for this canal that we can get better concessions by giving our Government the option of closing with the one making the best offer; but if we select the route in advance and give the President no discretion, he must accept such concessions as are offered by the one country, however hard or unreasonable, or else delay action until new legislation can be had by Congress. It is admitted that we have no concessions of any kind from Nicaragua. We are no worse off as to Panama. Before we decide definitely between these two countries let us see which will do best by us.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] is, I hope, right in thinking that the Democratic party is a party of "grand general ideas," of fundamental principles, and not a party of "higgling details," as he puts it; but, unfortunately, when you come to building a canal there are some "higgling details" that you must consider, and one of these is where the canal shall start; another is, where it is to end. I do not see how we can consider a canal question with-one of these is where the canal shall start; another is, where it is to end. I do not see how we can consider a canal question without these "higgling details" about where it is to be.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment, and very much opposed to it; and I am glad, as are many other gentlemen on this side of the Chamber, to discover that it has a Republican and not a Democratic source. We read in Holy Writ that poor old blind Isaac had the "wool pulled over his eyes," figuratively speaking although he rather suspected that something was speaking, although he rather suspected that something was wrong when prevailed on to give his blessing, for the poor old man finally said, "The hand is the hand of Esau, but the voice is the voice of Jacob." Some of us felt a moment ago that the good old Democratic hand of Missouri was in this amendment; but when the continuous from Minnesota sat through with his rewhen the gentleman from Minnesota got through with his re-marks we found that the voice was the Republican voice of that gentleman himself.

Now. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn], in his magnificent, sledge-hammer manner, read the Democratic platform to the House this evening, and I am glad that he said that there was one thing in a Democratic platform that he could love and admire. I am glad now to contrast Democratic plain speech with Republican duplicity in past platforms upon this subject. I am glad to repeat within the hearing of the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Missouri that the Democratic platform said—and I stand on it—that we were in favor of the "immediate construction"—of what?—"of the Nicaragua Canal."

And that it went on to denounce its political exponents for two

And that it went on to denounce its political opponents for two things: First, because they had in their platform taken refuge in the general vague phrase "isthmian;" and secondly, because they had in their legislative conduct taken refuge in delays of every sort, instead of carrying out to the heart the promise that they had made merely to the ear.

I do not agree with the gentleman from Missouri, that the dele ates to the Democratic national convention were such original idiots, such magnificent specimens of mental and linguistic incompetency, that when they wanted to say "a canal somewhere upon the Isthmus," they happened to say "Nicaragua Canal." I knew a great many of the men who were delegates at the convention. This was then no new question. It had been considered to the constant of the control of the control ered a good deal. They had been advocating a canal at Nicaragua, because they thought it was the best place to put it, and they came out in good, plain old Democratic speech and said that was where they wanted it. They settled the "higgling detail" of where it should be, right there and then, as far as they could settle it

Mr. SIMS. Did that exclude them or us from adopting another route, if it is more feasible?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Why, if I said that the gentleman was from Tennessee, I would exclude the idea that he was from Texas. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the Nicaragua route. I am in favor of it because it is the cheapest Nicaragua route. I am in favor of it because it is the cheapest route, because it is in the healthiest locality, because it is the best route of any proposed as a lock route, and because it makes New Orleans on the one side and San Francisco on the other 580 miles closer together than the Panama Canal route would, and because it makes New York and the Atlantic ports closer to our Pacific ports than the Panama Canal would. I believe that the chief benefit to be derived from the canal is in our trade between our Atlantic and Gulf ports on the one side and the Pacific ports on the other. I think there are many great advantages, but that is the chief advantage to be looked for. The next great advantage is of a naval character, and that is to enable us rapidly to mobilize our Gulf, Atlantic, and Pacific fleets whenever we need to unite them anywhere. For this purpose the Nicaragua route is more accessible to our bases and better. [Applausé,]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] withdraw his formal amendment?

Mr. SIMS. I do. Mr. MANN. I renew the amendment, Mr. Chairman. pose it is too much to expect that upon great public questions concerning national policies our friends on the other side of the aisle should agree. It is not to be expected that upon the money question or upon the tariff question they could present a united front, but I had hoped that when their party convention took the trouble to learn how to spell the word "Nicaragua" it would have its effect in producing unanimity upon that side of the House.

I was going to call the attention of the House to the practical effect of the adoption of this amendment. If this amendment should go into the bill, and the bill should become a law, the six months' time enumerated would elapse after the adjournment of this House next summer. It is true that Congress meets again next December, but it is equally true that under the rules and practice of this House it is impossible for the committee having charge of the canal question to report and obtain consideration of a bill at a short session of Congress. Whatever may be the inten-tion of the gentlemen who favor the amendment—and I do not impugn their motive-the practical effect will be to do that which has been done every term of Congress since I have been a member, to put the question off for two years longer, without result. [Ap-

The President of the United States to-day has the same power which is conferred upon him by this amendment. The only method by which the President can deal with a foreign power is by treaty. Congress can not confer upon him a greater power in this respect than the Constitution confers. If the President, under the advice of the Isthmian Canal Commission, desires to enter into negotiations with the Republic of Colombia, he has that power now. He can report his conclusions and recommendations to Congress at any time by a special message.

Long before a spadeful of earth has been removed or a drop of water diverted from its natural course the President will have an opportunity to lay before this Congress or before the Senate for its ratification a treaty, if he so desires, providing for the acquisition of the Panama Canal and rights from the Republic of Colombia. No, Mr. Chairman, this amendment is in line with the amendments and objections which have been raised for years. The same gentlemen to-day who have been urging these considerations in favor of the consideration of the Panama Canal have in the past had other reasons for delay.

It is time to act. It is time for gentlemen to reach a concluwhen we want to go to a point it is wise to go in the direction of that point and not in another direction. If we wish a canal, let us go toward the construction of a canal. The treaty-making power exists in the President, but he has not power to make the Republic of Nicaragua enter into a treaty.

On two different occasions a treaty was negotiated between the United States and Nicaragua allowing this country to build a canal. In 1849 a treaty was negotiated—the Hise treaty—and the President refused to submit it to the Senate. In 1884 another treaty was negotiated, and the President withdrew it from the Senate. Our only hope to obtain a respectable treaty is to get the benefit of our correlations on this matter by the respectable treaty is to get the benefit of our conclusions on this matter by the passage of this bill as it came from the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I offered yesterday a substitute for the bill which has been incorporated in the amendment being offered by the gentleman from Minnesota. It is offered not for the purpose of delay, but for the reason, I believe, that the members of this House are entitled to all the information that can be obtained in regard not only to the Nicaragua route, but also in regard to the Panama route. This committee has furnished us all the information in their power in regard to the Nicaragua

The Panama route has been more or less shoved aside because of the judgment of the Commission it was not worthy of consideration at the price asked by the Panama Company. These coneration at the price asked by the Panama Company. These conditions are now changed. In fact, there is a gentleman who has just arrived in Washington—Mr. Lampre—who is prepared to open up negotiations for the Panama route at a specified sum; and I am also informed on reliable authority that the chargé d'affaires of the United States of Colombia is prepared and his Government is prepared to practically allow Mr. Hay, or whatever representa-tive the United States may choose, to draft a treaty to suit the pleasure of the United States.

Why can not we get that information? Why this haste, gentlemen, to shove this matter through to-day? I would prefer that this bill be sent back to the committee, with instructions that the committee obtain in precise language from the representatives of the Panama Canal on what terms they are willing to sell, and also obtain from the representative of the United States of Colombia what their Government would do if the sale were consummated, and then to report back their findings, based upon the opinion of the experts comprising the Commission, to this House at the end of thirty days. We would then have the two propositions before us instead of being forced to vote on one. is not fair to us gentlemen who are put here in a representative capacity to force us to accept this route, and if we have not that capacity to force us to accept this route, and if we have not that information, and as we have not this information, I want the burden put upon the Executive, the President of the United States, and have him given such time as will enable him to obtain this information of which we are deprived.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last paragraph of the amendment.

paragraph of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, when the Nicaragua Canal bill was up for consideration in the House on the 2d of May, 1900, it passed by a vote of 224 as against 36. I was one of that minority of 36. Subsequent events have fully justified the minority. My reasons for voting against the bill were stated at the time. The first was that voting against the bill were stated at the time. The first was that the bill almost in express terms violated the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which I believed was then in force. I was willing for our country to uproot that treaty if necessary, but I was not willing for us to violate the treaty while it still existed. That difficulty has now been removed.

My second objection at that time was that the commission of experts, headed by Admiral Walker, had not then made their report. It seemed to me to be a very unwise course for business men to pursue to appoint a commission of experts, on whose judgment they proposed to rely, and then to act before those experts made their report. That report has now been made, so that this second objection has also been removed. Both grounds on which I then opposed the bill are now out of the way, and I am heartily in favor of immediate action on this matter.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed, opposed on principle, to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACK-LEFORD], that was drawn and fathered by the gentleman from Minnesota. I will never consent, as a member of this House, to shift the responsibility of acting in a matter of this importance, in absolute between these two revites involving millions upon in choosing between these two routes, involving millions upon millions of dollars to our taxpayers and great and untold results to our commercial interests in the future; I will never be willing to shift that responsibility off our own shoulders onto the shoulders of any single man in the White House. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, in justice to him as well as in justice to ourselves, we should decide that issue upon our own judgment and not put it off upon him. Furthermore, this amendment says that the Commission is to act with the President; or, in other words, the President is to decide in favor of the Panama route provided the Commission, or a majority of the Commission, decide in favor of that route.

Mr. Chairman, our country has seen too much of divided votes in courts and in commissions. This Commission, I am told, is composed of nine members. Suppose five stand one way and four the other; we are then putting the President into the position where, by the vote of one single individual, these vast interests, involving millions of dollars and affecting the commercial affairs of the country for generations to come, are to be decided in a way that the President himself is helpless to control, and practically decided by one other man, and that man not the President.

I recollect, Mr. Chairman, that there was another Commission, called the Electoral Commission, on one occasion, and although the people had elected Samuel J. Tilden President of the United States, that Commission by a vote of one majority denied him his office and gave it to another.

I recollect further that the Supreme Court by a vote of one majority decided that the United States Congress had no power under the Constitution to levy an income tax. I recollect further that that court by one majority decided this whole constitutional question of colonial imperialism. Mr. Chairman, I want no more such commissions, to be turned on either side by one man, and in this instance, under the proposed amendment, that man not the President of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia

has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, as I read this bill—and I want to know if I am correct in the construction, having read it as carefully as I knew how—if the bill is enacted into law in its present language, it will enable the President to do everything that it purports to authorize him to do without the necessity for making a treaty or having it ratified. Am I correct? I will ask the honorable gentleman from Iowa if that construction is correct.

Mr. HEPBÜRN. What form the President would elect to follow I do not know. I do not know whether it would be by stipulation with the State, or a convention, or whether it would be in the form of a treaty. Of course, either would be open to him.

Mr. CANNON. I am asking for the power conferred by this bill. Is it not true that it would confer a power on the President to secure control of the territory without the assent of the Senate? Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know of any manner by which negotiations of that kind could occur between independent states ex-

mr. CANNON. Then, although this bill was passed, the law ordained to-day, the gentleman believes that it would still be necessary to have a treaty made, and that treaty ratified by a two-thirds vote of the Senate?

Mr. HEPBURN. I so understand it; and I think the Administration understands it so, for I am told that they are engaged in preparing a protocol looking toward a treaty.

Mr. CANNON. I am also told that if this bill is enacted it will unquestionably confer the power, but whether it will be used or not I do not know. I ask that question for the reason that the gentleman from Wisconsin has alluded to the question of delay. If it is necessary for a treaty to be made with Nicaragua, it will take us as long to make a treaty with Nicaragua as it would with Colombia, so there will be no delay in one instance any more than in the other. Now, I want to say further that, so far as I am concerned, I shall vote for this provision if for no other reason than because it arms the President of the United States with the alternative, and enables him to choose between the two routes, and enables him to get reasonable terms from either one of these countries. That alone would be sufficient. I will not go any further as to the reasons given for favoring this amendment when I had the honor to address the House this afternoon before the general debate was closed. I think we owe it to the country and to ourselves to get the best possible route.

I listened to the honorable gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] when he professed to discuss this bill, and I asked myself the question whether from the tenor of his remarks it was the merits of the bill or the demerits of the individual now addressing the committee that were at stake. [Laughter.] The gentleman might be much wiser than he is, and I might be much more evil than I am, and still the merits of this bill and the proposed amendment would be the same. If he wanted the applause of the moment, he got it, and that is all right. Whether he got it by speaking to the facts or not is another question. I have always heard of building up a man of straw that you might knock him down. It is easy to do that if you construct him yourself. [Laughter.] He devoted some time to the outrages of the Committee on Appropriations, of which he said I had been a member for many and many a year, in usurping jurisdiction, with great comfort to himself and applause from gentlemen who are not aware of the facts.

The House Committee on Appropriations never has originated any proposition or any amendment touching a commission for the construction of a Nicaraguan Canal, because it was not committed to it. And it has only been treated upon such bills against the protest of the House Committee on Appropriations, and only came there by virtue of Senate amendments over which the House had no control. And I believe the gentleman from Iowa knows it.

Mr. HEPBURN. "The gentleman from Iowa" knows it; but he knows that the gentleman from Illinois was on each one of those committees of conference.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly; but the amendments originated in the Senate, and I had no more to do with them than the gentleman himself. I doubt if I had as much. [Laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]
The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD].
Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask that it be read again.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Objection was made.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected, there being—ayes 102, noes 170.

Mr. PARKER. I desire to move an amendment to the section, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1 by striking out all of such section after the word "Nicaragua," in line 5, down to and including the words "Pacific Ocean," in line 12, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Or from the United States of Colombia, for and in behalf of the United States, control of such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua, or to the United States of Colombia, as may be desirable and necessary on which to excavate, construct, and protect a canal of such depth and capacity as will be sufficient for the movements of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, from a point near Greytown, on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Brito, on the Pacific Ocean, or from a point near Colon, on the Caribbean Sea, to a point near Panama, on the Pacific Ocean, and also to acquire, at a reasonable price, any private rights or corporate rights or franchises within such territory, it being left to the President to select the route upon which in his judgment such rights and control can be promptly and economically obtained and such canal the more safely and economically built, and the President is authorized to enter into the matters aforesaid immediately and to complete the same with all reasonable dispatch."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman Lriscterosales.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a point of order on this amendment. I contend that it is not germane to the original proposition. I did not make this point of order on the original proposition. I did not make this point of order on the amendment just voted upon, because I presumed the House wanted to vote upon it. But we have practically voted on the present proposition already. The portion of the amendment that is new relates to the Panama Canal, and I contend that a proposition to build a canal across the Isthmus of Panama is no more germane to be ability to build a consequent them. to a bill to build a canal at Nicaragua than it would be upon a bill establishing a custom-house at New York City to move an amendment to erect a custom-house at Chicago.

Besides, I make the further point that the Clerk had already read the section to which this amendment refers and that it had been passed.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, the section had been read, and therefore was open to amendment offered upon the rejection of the previous amendment.

This is not a bill for a canal at Nicaragua, but a bill "to provide for a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans." I read the language of the title. Anything which oceans." I read the language of the title. Anything which comes within the purview of the title is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to be enlightened by the gentleman upon the point of order.

Mr. PARKER. So I understand. But I asked permission of the Chair to argue the merits of the amendment before the point of order is decided.

In opposition to the point of order, I submit that anything which comes within the purview of the title of the bill is germane. I submit, further, that when one amendment to a section has been disposed of, it is perfectly in order to submit another amendment to the same section.

To the amendment just voted upon by the Committee of the Whole the objection was made that it contained various provisions in regard to the action of a commission, and a delay of six months, and some other matters relating to the form of the proposition. We desire to ascertain whether the vote cast on that amendment was due to those matters of detail or to the merits of the proposition. This amendment proposes to leave the question in a broad way to the President of the United States. Is it a question of time? He is authorized to begin immediately and proceed with all dispatch. Is question made as to delegating our other authority than Congress the decision of a question of this kind. But the decision has been made by the Commission already authorized, and we confirm it. That Commission has said pracauthorized, and we confirm it. That Commission has said practically that both routes are good, but that it would prefer the cheaper route. If the gentleman from Alabama were going to buy a horse and had seen two horses which equally suited him, would he consider it wrong, if he could not deal directly with the owners of the horses, to employ an agent and tell him to buy the one he can get the cheapest? This is no delegation of choice.

If this bill providing for the Nicaragua route alone should pass, how long shall we have to wait for Nicaragua to "dicker" with us for a treaty on proper terms? If dispatch is wanted, give power to the President to say, "Each of you must give me terms now, for if either fails to do so I will go to the other."

That is all I have to say. I submit the question without further discussion.

discussion

The CHAIRMAN. Two points of order are made against this amendment. The first is that it proposes a canal across the Isthmus at Panama instead of at Nicaragua.

The subject-matter of this bill—the enterprise upon which the House has entered—is, in the language of the bill-

To construct a canal to connect the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific

The Chair is of the opinion that that is the purpose of the legislation sought; that the question of location is wholly a subordinate one, and that it is perfectly competent for Congress to reject one location and to adopt another. For instance, suppose it was a question of the building of a house for the purpose of storing the records of the Government, and a bill was introduced to locate it on a certain square in this city. Can anybody doubt that the proposition might be amended so as to locate it upon another

Now, the second point of order is that the House has just voted upon a similar proposition. The Chair in a legislative body should be very careful not to usurp the authority of the body itself. It may be that the House has determined the very question that is in this second proposition; but it may be that some of the language and conditions in the former one, if in the latter, would have affected the judgment of the House differently, and it is not for the Chair to say that it is identical in point of purpose or in point of detail, and the points of order are overruled. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Parker].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. PARKER demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 169.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to that section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1 so that it will read as follows:

"That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to acquire for and in behalf of the United States, control of such portion of territory as may be desirable and necessary on which to excavate, construct, and protect a canal of such depth and capacity as will be sufficient for the movements of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, from a point on the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific Ocean; and such sum as may be necessary to secure such control is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, that amendment simply proposes to eliminate from the section all reference to the Nicaragua Canal and Lake and the precise location of the termini of the canal. In other words, if this is adopted, the President, in his discretion, could acquire any suitable territory for the building of a canal across that Isthmus to connect the two oceans. This is a simple, plain proposition, about which I need say nothing, because anyone can easily apprehend it. It simply leaves with the President the power and discretion of acquiring the right and the necessary territory to construct a canal by way of the Nicaragua route, the Panama route, or any other route that may be deemed better than either of these, if there be any. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to clothe the President with If the Nicaragua route is the best one, I take it that this power. he would select it and acquire the necessary territory. If it is not, I do not see why he ought to be circumscribed in his selection.

Without further remark I submit the amendment.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, with reference to this amendment I simply desire to say that it is the same proposition that the House has already so emphatically pronounced its opinion upon. I am opposed to the commingling of the two, and to transferring any responsibility from the House, which some gentlemen seem to shirk, and placing it upon the shoulders of one man. I would not do it if he were forty Presidents. I hope the House will vote the amendment down as it has voted down the other. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KEHOE. I have an amendment to that section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "control," in line 5, section 1, and insert in lieu thereof ie word "ownership."

Mr. KEHOE. Mr. Chairman, at the opening of this debate I undertook to ascertain from the chairman of the committee if undertook to ascertain from the chairman of the committee if there was any special reason why the committee had used the word "control" instead of the word "ownership" in this bill. He did not see fit to answer my question, and I have not yet been able to determine why the word "control" was used. I do not know any authority that justifies such use. "Control" and "ownership" are not synonymous terms. The political parties of this country have all declared for the ownership of this canal. I read from the Republican platform:

We favor the construction, ownership, control, and protection of an isthmian canal by the Government of the United States.

I read from the Democratic platform:

We favor the immediate construction, ownership, and control of the Nicaraguan Canal by the United States.

I read from the Silver Republican platform:

We favor the speedy construction of the Nicaragua Canal, to be built, owned, and defended by the Government of the United States.

I hope the chairman of the committee will not understand by this amendment that I mean to quibble with his bill. I am for the bill. If I can not have it my way, I am for it the best way I can get it. For four hundred years the people of the earth have been divided as to the best route upon which to construct this canal; but they have all agreed that it should be built, and if the American people have agreed upon any one subject in connection with it, it is that after they have paid for it they and they alone should own it.

If it can not be thus acquired I think it would be better not to have it at all. I am unable to understand how a gentleman of the known intelligence of the distinguished chairman of this committee can conclude that "control" means "ownership," unless it should be due to his long service under the rules of this House; but he this morning disclaimed any friendship for those rules, and I do not want to blame him therewith. Neither according to any reputable lexicographer or the commonly accepted use of the words are the words "control" and "ownership" synonymous. I contend that if we are to pay for it we should own it. It ought to be ours absolutely. In this undertaking the watchword of the American people ought to be ownership of the canal. If my information is correct, we are dealing in this matter with a people who are as revolutionary in their tendencies as their countries are volcanic, and who do not view contracts with the same sacredness they do self-interest.

I favor the construction of an isthmian canal and am for it because I believe the duty of its construction has devolved upon us in the natural course of governmental events. We have grown until it has become a commercial necessity and of interest to our whole people, and its construction means their universal benefit. Its construction has been the dream of other nations for the past four hundred years, but they have all lacked the power to consummate their desire, and no Government but ours has ever besummate their desire, and no covernment but ours has ever be-fore possessed this power. On it they have all figured and failed, and now we, on the threshold of a new century, find ourselves able and our interests demanding and all the rest of the world waiting for us to build it. I say let us do so, but let us not take from our people to build this or anything else so great a sum as $200,000,000,000 and then have them awake to the realization of the fact that they do not own but simply have a controlling interest in it. A just God has clothed this nation with all the requirein it. A just God has clothed this nation with all the requirements necessary to make a success of this great undertaking. Let us do it, but, I repeat, let us do it right.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KEHOE. I will; certainly.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. How can the United States own it if it abuts at all on the United States of Colombia? Under their constitution they are unable to allowed a foot of land. All they constitution they are unable to alienate a foot of land. All they can do is to permit the "control."

Mr. KEHÔE. They can change their constitution, if need be.
[Laughter.] I am not here representing the interests of Colombia. I am here representing the interests of the American people.

We have, by the proper assertion of our Americanism, caused the powerful nation of England to change her contention of, and submit to, an abrogation of the ancient, but in the way, Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

Bulwer treaty.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a ques-

Mr. KEHOE. Certainly. Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman in favor of delaying the construction of the canal until they change their constitution?

Mr. KEHOE. I am not in favor of delaying the construction of the canal any longer than is necessary to make of it what it should be, to wit, a strictly American institution. I am in favor should be, to wit, a strictly American institution. I am in favor of delaying it until that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. KEHOE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that he may be allowed to proceed one minute.

Mr. KEHOE. Five minutes. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Objection was made.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. KEHOE. Is objection made? I thought the Chair had ruled that I had one minute. Who made the objection?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky may be extended for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Chair hears none.

Mr. KEHOE. Mr. Chairman, I do not want this canal constructed under a contract written by this generation and construed by the next. Do we not know from our experience here to-day that the word "Nicaragua" has been construed by honest and intelligent gentlemen to mean isthmus; and what construc-tion might be put upon the language of any contract this Govern-ment might make for the mere control of this canal no man can tell. More laws and contracts have been violated by construction than by brigands. Avoid the dangers and pitfalls of construc-than by origands. Avoid the dangers and pittans of construc-tion by owning the canal.

The word "ownership," sir, means exclusive possession; "con-trol" means limited possession—an accounting to somebody, or a partnership of some kind, or a lease, or the paying a tribute somewhere. We are to pay all the money for its construction, and we ought to own it absolutely when it is constructed. I do not agree with my Democratic friends from Missouri and Tennessee that our platform is properly capable of the construction they place upon it with reference to a canal. Its declaration was as plain as language could make it. Nor do I admit that we are now following the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn]. He is following us. We now have him upon one plank of our platform, and I hope we will have him on more later on.

I believe a man ought to improve as he grows older, and I am glad to note improvement in him. This is a Democratic proposi-tion, because it stands for universal progress and benefit. It was con, because it stands for universal progress and benefit. It was enunciated by the Democratic party because of its general good, and not to serve any special interest. This is a plain Democratic American proposition, that has for its purpose "the greatest good to the greatest number." It is in no wise akin to the policy that has heretofore gone forth clothed in the white robes of "benevolence" and returned steeped in the blood of an unoffending and defended are recorded. defenseless people. I would deal fairly with the countries through which this canal is to be constructed; I would pay them full value for all we got, but to avoid future complications and trouble I would leave nothing for construction.

The gentleman on the other side is not a proper instructor for Democrats on this or any other proposition. They have always stood for this sort of advancement and progress, or expansion, if you wish to call it such. All of the peaceful and proper growth of this country has taken place under Democratic administrations. We are not afraid of progress and growth, but detest force, wars, and wrongs, and will never be a party to their infliction upon any people anywhere. We believe there can be no greatness without goodness, no progress without peace.

In his opening speech the gentleman in charge of this bill said he hoped some day to see this canal serve the purpose of a ship subsidy, but that he feared to mention that matter, because the word subsidy had been objectionable to us since the days of Jefferson. And so it has been, and always will be. Jefferson disliked subsidies, because condemned by the seventh commandment, and so do we. We hope this canal will lead to good old Democratic free trade and equal rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. FLEMING. A point of order. Did I understand the Chair to say "the ayes have it?"

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia did understand the Chair to say so, but the Chair was mistaken in that statement. [Laughter.] The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as fol-

SEC. 2. That when the President has secured full control over the territory in section 1 referred to he shall direct the Secretary of War to excavate and construct a canal and waterway from a point on the shore of the Caribbean Sea, near Greytown, by way of Lake Nicaragua, to a point near Brito, on the Pacific Ocean. Such canal shall be of sufficient capacity and depth as that it may be used by vessels of the largest tonnage and greatest draft now in use, and shall be supplied with all necessary locks and other appliances to meet the necessities of vessels passing from Greytown to Brito; and the Secretary of War shall also construct such safe and commodious harbors at the termini of said canal, and such provisions for defense, as may be necessary for the safety and protection of said canal and harbors.

Mr. RURGESS. Mr. Chairman, Loffer the following amend-

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 2 by striking out all of said section after the word "canal," in line 14, and add in lieu thereof the following words: "and such fortifications and provisions as will enable the United States to control and utilize the canal and harbors to their military advantage in event of war, and to protect the canal in its neutral peaceful operation in peace."

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I have but little to add to the reasons I argued yesterday, upon which I predicate this amendment. This can not now be charged as being a question of delay. That is eliminated, and now the question confronts you of whether this bill, speaking for the representatives of the American people, shall instruct the Secretary of War to fortify this canal, so this this Government in the event of war, may utilize it to its milithis Government, in the event of war, may utilize it to its military advantage against any hostile foe or not.

That is the issue, and that is exactly what is intended to be met in the ambiguous language of the bill reported by the committee by this amendment. And nothing, believe me or not, nothing but a stern sense of duty that I owe to the people that I represent, and of my abiding belief in the unanimity of the American people in favor of the fortification of this canal, and the conviction of the wisdom of that belief, could have induced me as a new member to introduce an amendment in the face of the unanimous report of a committee made up of members from both great parties. But I tell you that I regard both national platforms of both national parties as demanding this amendment.

This project was debated all over our land for years, and the people, whether politicians did or not, understood that this canal was to be built as an American project, to be used for America's advantage commercially and as a military work. You can not discuise it. They are unanimous for the imprediate concan not disguise it. They are unanimous for the immediate construction of this canal, its ownership by this country, and its control by this country commercially and from a military standpoint, in spite of whatever construction may be put upon this

The 1900 Republican national platform declared, "We favor the construction, ownership, control, and protection of an isthmian canal by the Government of the United States." Mark the expression, "control and protection." The 1900 Democratic national platform declared, "We favor the immediate construction, owner-like the Nicoragan Canal by the United States." ship, and control of the Nicaraguan Canal by the United States."
Here is that same word "control." Could that word have been intended only as a commercial peace term and limited in scope to only mean the United States could police the canal, viz, control only in time of peace?

This contention can not be true. The conditions which existed at the time this word was used by both parties, the widespread discussions over the country which preceded its use, all clearly point to the fact that the word was used in its full significance; that the people understood that "control" should control in war or in peace, and that all the necessary means to the exercise of that right of "ownership" either in war or peace must be provided by Congress. I press, then, this question: If it be not fortified, when war comes what assurance that we will "control" the canal have we?

You, each of you, gentlemen, must respond under your conscience and sense of platform fealty whether the new member from Texas is right in his contention as to the construction of these platforms upon this great nonpartisan American project, and upon your vote on this amendment you will be responsible to the people who elected you to represent them under instructions.

The question was taken on the amendment, and on a division (demanded by Mr. Burgess) there were 48 ayes and 194 noes. So the amendment was disagreed to. Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, as an evidence of the care with which this bill has been prepared and of the thoroughness with which it covers has been prepared and of the thoroughness with which it covers every point of approach possible, I wish to call attention to line 12, section 2, just read. It says the canal "shall be supplied with all necessary locks and appliances to meet the necessities of vessels passing from Grey Town to Brito."

Now, I supposed the proposition was to make this a both-ways canal, but really there is only provision for vessels going one way.

[Laughter.] I presume the expectation is that the Senate, if we provide for one course, will provide for the other. [Laughter.] It is so arranged, I suppose, that if we get the vessel through from Grey Town to Brito we may depend upon the Senate to provide for the passage from Prite to Cray Town

the passage from Brito to Grey Town. [Laughter.]

The locks are to be so equipped, thanks to the care and far-sightedness of those who built this bill, as to meet the necessities sightedness of those who built this bill, as to meet the necessities of vessels passing from Grey Town to Brito. What is to happen with respect to the vessels, if any, seeking passage from Brito to Grey Town the architects of this bill have not disclosed. Now, these locks, I think, ought to be double-barreled locks; they ought to work both ways. [Laughter.] This was expected to be a perfectly fair, nonpartisan, broad-minded bill, and yet I think the people of the Pacific coast are not treated quite right. I doubt whether dwellers on the Atlantic coast who, unwarily, might send their ships through from Grey Town to Brito would be treated properly, with no provision made to get them back in be treated properly, with no provision made to get them back, in case they might want them again.

This is only one of the many oddities of the bill. But I have no doubt that all these things have been most carefully studied out. Nothing has been left out of the bill and nothing put into the bill without reason first asserting itself very steadily. Possibly this is one of the particular parts that was thought out in the nighttime. Some gentlemen have informed us that they lay awake o' nights thinking about the bill. Somebody was awake in the night, or thought he was awake [laughter], when this part of the bill was drafted. So, in order that the bill shall go through just right, and that all may have confidence that the committee have fixed it up right, I have called attention to this one peculiarity, which could not have been accidental, but which must be the ripe fruit of triumphant reason.

Mr. DAVIS. Does not the gentleman think that when the bill provides for vessels going through one way it contains ample provision for their going back?

Mr. DE ARMOND. That is what I do not know. [Laughter.] That is what the bill does not disclose. Some persons might suppose that providing simply for vessels passing through the canal would be ambiguous without specification of the direction in which they must move. I do not know. Perhaps the intention was to provide for movement each way. I hope that my friend is right about it; that there is a covert intention, concealed doubtless for a wise purpose, to make provision also for vessels returning

Mr. WANGER. On that point will my friend permit me to suggest that possibly an explanation of the phraseology may be gathered from the opera of Erminie, where one accomplished thief says to the other, "Never go East; it is low." [Laughter.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. Well, that may be an explanation. There are probably many other paragraphs or points of the bill that will be open to some explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his amendment?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Oh, yes; I withdraw it. I would not like to interfere with the happy phraseology of this section. [Laugh-

The next section of the bill was read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the President shall cause such surveys as may be necessary for said canal and harbors, and in the constructing of the same may employ such persons as he may deem necessary.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, to be added at the end of this section, in these words:

Utilizing fully, however, so far as may be, the services of the engineers in the Army of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, this section is somewhat peculiar in its phrase-ogy. The President is authorized to cause such surveys to be ology. The President is authorized to cause such surveys to be made as may be necessary, and in constructing the canal and harbors to employ "such persons as may be necessary." I am one of those who think that it would be entirely proper, if any provision is to be made at all about this matter, to provide that the Government engineers, already employed by the people and paid by them, and many of them having nothing else to do, shall be employed in this work rather than that outsiders should be hired.

I should be glad too if it might be—but of course it can not be

I should be glad, too, if it might be—but of course it can not be at this time and in this place—to understand whether the civilservice law and rules are to apply in the employment of these "necessary" persons, and how many there are to be, and whether the work is to be done by letting the whole of it to one huge contractor, or whether it is to be given out to a number of contractors or is to be done by the Government direct. I should like to know whether gentlemen who are so scrupulously careful not to give the Precident the ordinary of promising with two processing and the contractors. know whether gentlemen who are so scrupulously careful not to give the President the option of negotiating with two parties, using his judgment in determining in a tentative way which arrangement would be productive of the best results, trust him so blindly in these matters. I would like to know why gentlemen who are so careful not to impinge upon the powers and rights of Representatives here by conferring this authority upon the President, are so willing to leave all the matters involved in this section en-

The President is to be authorized to "employ such persons as may be necessary." In making these selections is he to act within the civil-service rules or contrary to them? Must the persons selected be engineers or persons engaged in scientific pursuits, or may they be persons adapted merely to the performance of clerical work? All these questions are left to the President. Gentlemen who are so doubtful of him at one point and so regardful of their own rights seem to be indifferent, at least, when we come to other matters.

If there were any hope of putting this section into such form as to make it mean one thing or the other—either to give the President complete power without any doubt or to hedge his power about with safeguards and restrictions—I would be glad to offer some other amendments. But for the present I offer merely this amendment to provide for the use of Government engineers. this amendment to provide for the use of Government engineers. It seems to me there should be no objection to it. If the House means that these officers shall remain in idleness while drawing pay, and that outsiders shall be employed by way of distributing patronage, let the amendment be voted down.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri is a very natural one. The provision which he proposes to insert here was, I remember, in the bill as originally introduced in a former Congress. It was afterwards changed so as to read in its present form.

The object of this change was that there should not be a discrimination as between different classes of Government employees. To say that the President should select Army engineers would by

To say that the President should select Army engineers would by inference suggest that he could not select naval engineers or offiinference suggest that he could not select naval engineers or omcers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey or officers of other Departments of the Government. The provision was drawn in its present form for the express purpose of authorizing the President, so far as he might deem proper, to select any of the officials now in the employ of the Government.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Or from civil life.
Mr. MANN. Yes; or from civil life. The purpose was to avoid raising any inference, by naming a certain class of Government engineers, that other classes of Government employees might not be selected.

Mr. WANGER. I desire to offer an amendment by way of substitute for that offered by the gentleman from Missouri. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "may," where it first occurs in line 19, the words "detail or;" so as to read "may detail or employ such persons," etc. I agree thoroughly with my friend from Illinois [Mr. Mann] as to the purpose of the adoption of the language in this section; but it seems to me that it does invite a possible misconstruction, and that it might be held to exclude the detail of officers of the Army, Navy, Marine or Engineer Corps.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Wanger] that the amendment he offers would properly follow the disposition of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. De Armond], but it can not be offered as an amendment to that amendment, because that amendment is a different proposition altogether. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later.

Mr. WANGER. My purpose was to offer it as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted, following the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois, I desire to have my amendment modified, so that instead of saying "in the Army" it may say "in the employ of the Government." The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that modification can be

Mr. DE ARMOND. I should be glad to have the amendment read as modified.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of section 3 the following: "Utilizing fully, however, so far as may be, the services of the engineers in the employ of the Government of the United States."

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say one word in reference to that amendment offered by my friend from Missouri and the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Wanment proposed by the gentleman from Felinsylvania [Mf. ArGER]. I think they both do a very great injustice to two great branches of our national service, the Army and the Navy. The Army and Navy have plenty to do to keep their mouths shut, and they ought to do that. [Laughter and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken on Mr. DE ARMOND's amendment, on a division, demanded by Mr. DE ARMOND, there were—ayes 95,

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have tellers on this proposition.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. DE AR-MOND and Mr. HEPBURN.

The committee again divided and the tellers reported, ayes 88,

Accordingly, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 6. That the sum of $10,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, toward the project herein contemplated; and the Secretary of War is, further, hereby authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for materials and work that may be deemed necessary for the proper excavation, construction, defense, and completion of said canal, harbors, and defenses, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be hereafter made, not to exceed in the aggregate $180,000,000.

The following proposed committee amendment was read:

In line 12, after the word "made," insert the following: "On warrants to be drawn by the President of the United States."

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, that is the committee amendment which I was authorized to offer.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANDIVER. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7, page 3, after the word "authorized," insert "after classifying the work and dividing it into sections, so as to secure competition among contractors for subdivisions of the work, and after reasonable advertisement for bids in sections."

Mr. VANDIVER. The purpose of this amendment is to secure competition among bidders for the contract. If it be left to be bid on as a whole, it will be impossible for anybody else except a large syndicate, a great corporation, to bid for any part of the work. The probability is that under those conditions the whole of the work would fall into the hands and under the control of one great syndicate. The purpose of this amendment is simply to indicate our wish that we should have as much competition as possible in securing bids for this work, and that makes it necessary to divide the work into sections. I think this would have a wholesome effect, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VANDIVER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill, with the amendment, to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GROSVENOR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3110) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, and with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question upon the amendment and the bill to its final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks the previous question on the bill and amendment to its final passage.

question on the bill and amendment to its final passage.

Mr. VANDIVER. May I ask the gentleman from Iowa to withhold that while I ask unanimous consent that all members who have spoken on the bill be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion, the gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken upon the bill be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is on the motion of the gentleman

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered. The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly engrossed and read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.
Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill with the instructions which I send to the Clerk's desk.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to recommit the bill with instructions. The Clerk will report the motion. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 3110) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans be recommitted to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, with instructions to report back to the House within thirty days, as a substitute therefor, a bill providing as follows:

1. Enabling the President of the United States to acquire all necessary rights, for and in behalf of the United States, from the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, or from the United States of Colombia, for the construction of an isthmian canal, as in his judgment would be most advantageous to the United States of America, and authorizing him, in reaching a proper conclusion in the premises, to avail himself of the services of the Isthmian Canal Commission as it is now constituted or as it was constituted at the time of the submission of its late report to Congress.

2. Authorizing the President of the United States, if in his judgment a canal across the Isthmus of Panama would be most advantageous to the United States of America, to acquire from the corporations or persons interested therein the Panama Canal, so far as constructed, with all the property rights, privileges, and franchises, free and clear of all incumbrances, for a sum not exceeding $40,000.000.

3. Providing all necessary appropriations for the execution of all the provisions embraced in said bill, including a provision fixing the ultimate limit of cost, as nearly as may be, of a canal over either of the routes embraced in said bill, together with a provision authorizing the making of contracts in excess of appropriations carried by the bill and within said respective limits of cost.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask for tellers. It will take but a minute. Gentlemen's dinners can wait. [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, there has been no vote on the question. How can the gentleman demand tellers until there is a vote?

Mr. CANNON. Out of regard to the desire not to make a record, as evidently the House does not want to vote for this proposition, I withdraw the demand.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, to recommit with instructions.

The question was taken, and the motion to recommit was

The SPEAKER. The Chair feels it his duty to state to the House that an impression prevails among the officers at the desk that when the name of Mr. McLain of Mississippi was called some one responded by mistake, and an investigation does not develop the fact that Mr. McLann has been present during the day's session. And yet the Chair possesses no authority to strike from the roll a name which has been recorded, although, as stated, he feels it his duty to call the matter to the attention of the House.

On this question the yeas are 309, nays 2, answering "present" 1, and so the bill is passed. [Applause.]

On motion of Mr. HEPBURN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid upon the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER announced the following change of reference: A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury relating to the con-sulate at Puerta Cortez, Honduras, from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

CORRECTION OF A VOTE.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, upon consultation with some of my colleagues from Mississippi I am satisfied that Mr. McLain has not been present at the roll call, and there was evidently a mistake made in inserting his name.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi that this can be corrected in the morning in the Journal.

The SPEAKER. All members will, of course, appreciate the delicacy involved in the question of erasing a name from the record after it has been once placed thereon by an officer of the House. Of course, in the present instance it could make no possible change in the result, but in a close vote it might lead to very serious consequences. Unless a member himself calls attention to the error, the Chair thinks that to undertake to erase a name, under such circumstances, would be setting a precedent for very dangerous legislation. The Chair, therefore, although he felt it his duty to call attention to the matter, would decline to order the name erased.

And then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE, at 5 o'clock and 36 minutes

p. m., the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 10, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. McLAIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the RECORD, and, I presume, also the Journal.

On reference to the RECORD of the proceedings of yesterday I find that I am recorded as having voted on the passage of the canal bill. That is a mistake. I was not present at the time the vote was taken, but was en route from my home in Mississippi and did not arrive here until about 10 o'clock last night. How the mistake occurred of course I am not able to say-possibly a clerical error or through the inadvertent answer by some one else when my name was called.

I desire to add in this connection that I should have voted as I am recorded had I been present and voting, but was denied that privilege by reason of being detained at home in consequence of the serious illness of my sister.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the mistake occurred, as he is informed, through Mr. McRAE of Arkansas inadvertently answering when the gentleman's name was called, understanding it to have been a call of his own name. Mr. McRAE came to the desk immediately after the call was over and RAE came to the desk immediately after the call was over and notified the Clerk that he thought he had made a mistake and answered at the wrong time. The Chair had not learned this when he called attention to the matter on yesterday immediately after the roll call.

If there be no objection, the Journal will be corrected, as suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi, and approved.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker— The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise-to correct the Journal?

Mr. SIMS. No, Mr. Speaker; but to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Richardson] be excused from attendance on the sessions of the House for the rest of the week.

The SPEAKER. That request would better come after the Journal is approved.

Mr. SIMS. I thought it had been approved.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that the better form in such cases is to send up a slip to the desk with the request set forth, so that it can be acted upon without taking up the time of

The Journal was then approved.
Mr. SIMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I renew the request.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that his colleague, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, be excused from attendance on the sessions of the House during the remainder of the week on account of serious illness. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from New York that perhaps that motion would come just as well at a later hour in the session of the day than at this From what I have learned there will be something of general debate on the special order which has been assigned for to-day, and it may be desirable to complete the consideration of the bill relating to the census. I hope the gentleman will make his motion at a later hour in the session of the day. This, however, is merely a suggestion.

Mr. PAYNE. If there is any danger that the bill will not be completed to-day I will withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion is withdrawn.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report a bill making appropriation for the payment of invalid and other pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8581) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. All points of order are reserved on the bill.

Mr. BARNEY. I desire to give notice in this connection, Mr. Speaker, that I shall ask recognition on next Mandacine, Mr. Speaker, that I shall ask recognition on next Monday, immediately after the completion of the District business, for the consideration of this bill.

PERMANENT CENSUS.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to an order previously issued, I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider House bill No. 198, a bill to create a permanent census.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. Moody of Massa-whole House on the chair.

chusetts in the chair.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been prepared to almost the universal demand not only of the members of the House, but of the people of the country generally. This subject of having a permanent office for the purpose of gathering statistics, as provided in this bill, is one that has attracted the attention of the general public for nearly thirty years. It was recommended by Mr. Walker as long ago as when he was Superintendent of the Census. It was recommended again by Mr. Porter, who took the Eleventh Census. In 1892, Mr. Chairman, a committee was appointed for the purpose of investigating this whole subject, and made a report in the Fifty-second Congress, where such expert statisticians as Mr. Kendall, Thomas Donaldson, Joseph D. Weeks, Francis A. Walker, Dr. J. S. Billings, Frank R. Williams, Carroll D. Wright, and

J. A. Price united in recommending a permanent bureau.

Now, the reasons assigned cover every phase of this subject.

A great many claim that the establishment of a permanent bureau will entail an additional expense upon the Government. These men who have investigated this subject all unite in the conclusion that it will be less expensive to the Government to have a permanent bureau, and a permanent class of trained employees for the taking of the census and the gathering of statistics provided for in the bill, than it will be under the old plan that has been maintained in the past. People who have not investigated the subject can little appreciate the vast army of employees that every ten years collect, inexperienced as they are, for the purpose of aiding this gigantic work. Under the present census the Director has had under his immediate control more than 60,000 employees. These people have been selected with the greatest care, and yet it has been at a tremendous expense to the Government, much greater than it would have been if we had had a permanent bureau, and had trained men to organize the work and select agents for the purpose of doing this work.

The present Director of the Census, after his experience that has been given to the rubble from time to time game before our has been given to the public from time to time, came before our committee and reported that it was not only a question of economy to the Government, but that the work could be done infinitely better by the establishment of a permanent bureau and the se-lection and retention of these men who are experts.

Now, to illustrate my point. One of the chiefs of these great divisions in 1892 said that in his department he had 600 clerks. They were inexperienced and uneducated in that branch of the service in which they were employed. He stated that only 150 of these, after long service, were of any benefit whatever to that department, and that 450 were an absolute waste to the service besides the expense entailed on the General Government. The view of this division chief is concurred in by all the other chiefs who have had anything to do with the work. The present Director of the Census stated to our committee that they have selected clerks in the various divisions that have become experts for this Bureau, and if this Bureau is made permanent these men can be retained and will go on.

Gentlemen will understand that after the census reports are published there are four or five years' work laid out to be done that can be done by expert employees retained in the service.

Now, gentlemen, it is not my purpose to take up any special time in opening debate here. So far as I have been able to discover, the vast majority of the members of this House have given this subject their personal investigation, and they have arrived at the conclusion I expressed, that the needs of the Government demand that this bureau should be made permanent, and therefore I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CORLISS. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HOPKINS.

Mr. CORLISS. If this bureau is made permanent, what effect will it have upon the department with reference to the civil-service law?

Mr. HOPKINS. It will have the effect of making it permanent. If the bureau is made a permanent bureau, it is within the power of the President to extend the civil-service rules over these employees as he has in the past over other departments of the Government. These clerks have all been selected under examinations quite as severe as any civil-service examination. They have had two or three years' experience. I am not stating anything beyond the fact when I say that they are the best and most expe-rienced of any employees of any department of the Government to-day.

Mr. CORLISS. I asked the question for the purpose of bringing out that information. I regard the department as most efficient. The clerks are active, young, and capable, and I would like to see the department made permanent and the employees retained, even if some of them are transferred to some other department.

ments in place of old barnacles and incompetents.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I wish to ask the chairman of this committee this question: If we desire to bring about a condition of eligibility on the part of these clerks for transfer to and employment in the various Departments of the Government, will it be necessary to have some legislation in that behalf, or, in the judgment of the gentleman, will it be competent, after the passage of this bill, for the President to extend the civil-service law over these clerks, so that they may be transferred to the various Departments?

I think it is within the power of the President Mr. HOPKINS. to extend the civil-service rules over the entire body of these clerks, and then I know of no law which would prevent their eligibility for transfer to other Departments.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. But they must be examined again? Mr. GROSVENOR. Let me finish my inquiry. I would like to know, in the first place, how many of these employees of the Census Bureau there have been—the greatest number at any one

Mr. HOPKINS. At one time there were more than 3,400.
Mr. GROSVENOR. Will not the records disclose the fact that of that number of employees not more than 25, probably not more than 20, were at any time during their incumbency found to be incompetent?

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman has stated the fact as I understand it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, if the temporary rolls of the Departments are to-day depleted to such an extent that their work is in some degree impeded, would it not be very wise to give these surplus clerks a status under the civil-service law, so that they can go into those places?

Mr. HOPKINS. That seems to be the opinion of every gentleman who has thoroughly investigated the subject, as I see my friend from Ohio has done

friend from Ohio has done.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to state that on behalf of a stenographer in one of these Departments who had an opportunity to take for a brief period much better employment elsewhere, I made application for temporary leave of absence—without pay, of course; and I was told by the chief of the bureau in which this stenographer is employed that it would be impossible to grant the leave because of the apparent impossibility of getting efficient people to fill such vacancies upon the temporary roll. And I then suggested to that chief of bureau that an apply about, if possible, a transfer of some of these

And I then suggested to that chief of bureau that an application be made to bring about, if possible, a transfer of some of these efficient people who have been engaged in the Census Bureau.

Mr. CORLISS. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit another question? In view of the suggestions which have been made, and in view of the fact that the President has power to bring these employees within the classified civil-service list, why is it not wise to amend this bill so as to effect that very purpose?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to my friend from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] that after consultation with the Director of the Census and with the members of the Census Committee of the Senate.

and with the members of the Census Committee of the Senate, and with various members of the House, it was thought wise that we should in this bill simply make the present Bureau permanent. That will leave the Bureau absolutely under the control of Congress. It was thought that this would be a better method of dealing with the question than to complicate this measure with additional provisions such as suggested by the gentleman from Michigan. In the opinion of the committee, the desired result can be more easily reached in the way provided by this bill than in the way suggested by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois how many of these clerks were originally employed in the Census Office—as near as he can give it?

Mr. HOPKINS. Three thousand four hundred and eighty clerks were originally employed in the Bureau proper.

Mr. HEMENWAY. How many clerks are now employed in that Bureau?

Mr. HOPKINS. Two thousand seven hundred.
Mr. HEMENWAY. If this Bureau be made permanent, how many clerks will have to be continued in the service of the Bureau?
Mr. HOPKINS. That will depend, of course, upon the amount of work imposed upon the Bureau by Congress from time to time. The Director of the Census, who appeared before the House committee, stated that with the work as now provided for the force for the years 1902 and 1903 would be 800; for the two years following, 750, and after that period, if Congress should not impose any new duties upon the Bureau, that the force could be still further reduced.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then if this bill should pass, at least 2,000 of the 2,700 clerks now employed in that Bureau must go out of service during the present year, or before 1903?

Mr. HOPKINS. Before 1903 about 1,900 would go out of the

Mr. HEMENWAY. They would go completely out of the census service? Mr. HOPKINS.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.
Mr. HEMENWAY. Then it is not intended by the committee that upon the passage of this bill this army of clerks shall be

Mr. HOPKINS. Not at all. That matter will be subject to the will of Congress and will be largely under the control of my friend from Indiana [Mr. Hemenway] and my honored colleague [Mr. Cannon], as members of the Committee on Appropriations, because the Director of the Census is required to go before that committee with his estimates. The number of employees will be left entirely in the control, primarily, of that committee, and secondarily of Congress. Congress will always have absolute control.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And the gentleman thinks that the force by 1903 will be decreased to about seven or eight hundred people?

Mr. HOPKINS. Eight hundred.

Mr. Bartlett and Mr. Butler of Pennsylvania rose. The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Is it your understanding that it will be necessary to increase the force temporarily in 1910, or will the present force of clerks as contemplated by this bill be sufficient for the taking of the Thirteenth Census?

Mr. HOPKINS. In the taking of the next census the force will undoubtedly be very much increased over what it was in taking the Twelfth Census. We have now approximately 76,000,000 peo-ple under this census. In the next ten years it is estimated that, ple under this census. In the next ten years it is estimated that, with our new territory, we will have more than 100,000,000 people, and instead of a force of 62,000 people being required, such as the Director had at one time, under the present bill that force will probably be increased to 100,000 employees.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. My question applied to the force that we are now supposed to legislate for, the force of clerks in the Bureau at Washington. I did not refer to the enumerators or those who may be appointed to take statistics throughout the country. I referred to the clerical force at Washington.

Mr. HOPKINS. The force at Washington in taking the Thirteenth Census will be greatly increased in numbers over the force required in taking the Twelfth Census. Probably, instead of being a force of 3,400, it may reach a maximum of 5,000. Nobody could tell with any degree of accuracy, however, at this time.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey and Mr. BARTLETT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the two thousand and odd employees who will leave the Census Bureau will be employed in the other Departments by transfer?

Mr. HOPKINS. It is the hope of the committee that if this ments by transfer? Mr. HOPKINS. It is the hope of the committee that if this bill becomes a law the force that will not be needed in the Census Bureau proper can be absorbed in the other Departments. That is one of the objects of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to my colleague from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask my colleague a question or two on that line. Will the passage of this bill in any way change the present status of the Census Bureau so far as the civil-service law or the classified service is concerned?

Mr. HOPKINS. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the Civil Service Commission have rendered an opinion that if this bill becomes a law the President will have the power to extend the civil-service law over the entire force.

Mr. MANN. Well, I would suggest to my colleague that the President has that power now under the civil-service law.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Not under the special census law.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will state to my colleague [Mr. MANN] that he is not entirely correct in that conclusion. I think it has been held by the Commission and also by the President that this being purely a temporary force he has not the power to extend the civil-service rules over them that he would have if it were a permanent force.

Mr. MANN. The original act provided for their appointment in a certain way, but it did not provide that the persons appointed should not be covered into the classified service; and the civilservice act clearly confers upon the President the power to cover any employee of the Government into the classified service.

any employee of the Government into the classified service.

Mr. STEELE. Great lawyers will differ. [Laughter.]

Mr. LACEY. Let me suggest to the gentleman that rural free delivery, which is a temporary service, has already gone in.

Mr. MANN. Why, there is no possible question about the authority under the civil-service law. The point I want to make is this, if my colleague will permit me, that if this bill becomes a law it will be a service.

as this, it my colleague will permit me, that it this bill becomes a law it will still become necessary, in order to transfer any of these employees, that the President shall cover this service into the classified service before the employees are discharged.

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman believe, in view of the record of the President on this question, that he will be likely to cover this service into the classified service for the purpose of filling the Department of the Covernment with prople the heave not the Departments of the Government with people who have not passed the civil-service examination?

Mr. HEATWOLE. But they have passed a civil-service exami-

Mr. HOPKINS. They have passed a civil-service examinationan examination quite as severe in every particular as the examination provided by the Civil Service Commission; and, in addition to that examination, they have had from one to two and a half years of experience in their respective lines of work, so that they are specially qualified not only for this service, but for the clerical work in the other Departments of the Government.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman as to the available timber; but, Mr. Chairman, these employees will mostly be discharged within the next six months.

Mr. HOPKINS. My colleague from Illinois asked me, in view of the previous record of the President of the United States, whether an order will be made covering them into the civil serv-The best answer I can make to him is that the rural free delivery has been placed under the civil service without examina-

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt he will place the Census Bureau under the civil service eventually. Will he put it under the civil service in time to cover those employees under its provisions that the gentlemen of the House are so very anxious about now?

Mr. HOPKINS. I can not tell that; but I can say this, that if we pass this bill here to-day, it will be taken up by the Senate at once, passed by the Senate, and presented to the President for his approval in time for such an order to be made, if it is the wish of the House and the Senate that such an order be made.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman believes that such an order should be made, what objection is there to an amendment providshould be made, what objection is there to an amendment providing that the present employees of the Census Bureau may be transferred to other Departments of the Government.

Mr. HOPKINS. I can not accept an amendment of that kind, Mr. CORLISS. Are amendments in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at the present. This is general debate.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will now yield to the gentleman from Control for a question.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will now yield to the gentleman from Georgia for a question.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to make this inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois: The original bill under which this Bureau was man from Illinois: The original bill under which this bureau was established provided that the appointments were not to be made under the civil-service rules. This bill provides that all provisions of said act and acts amendatory thereto not inconsistent therewith are to continue in force. Now, nothing is said in the bill we are considering in reference to appointments, whether they shall be within or without the civil-service rules. Would it not be proper in this bill to continue that provision of the original bill which provided that the appointments should be made without reference to the civil-service law? out reference to the civil-service law?

Mr. HOPKINS. I am informed that it is not so held by the Commission

Mr. BARTLETT. It looks as if we are legislating.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, may I ask my colleague one

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, may I ask my colleague one other question?

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MANN. What effect, if any, will the passage of this bill have upon the present statistical bureaus of the Government, such as the Bureau of Statistics of the Navy Department and the Bureau of Foreign Commerce of the State Department?

Mr. HOPKINS. Nothing in its present form. The matter was carefully considered by the Director of the Census and the committee of the House that reported this bill, and it was thought wise to make it a permanent bureau and then leave it to Congress wise to make it a permanent bureau and then leave it to Congress to determine what other bureaus, if any, should be added.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would like to ask the gentleman a ques-

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama. Mr. BANKHEAD. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if these employees are put under the civil-service act, how can their numbers be reduced as contemplated in this report?

Mr. HOPKINS. They can be reduced at any time.
Mr. BANKHEAD. They can not be reduced if they are under the civil service

Mr. HOPKINS. They can be reduced if the Government has no need of their services

Mr. BANKHEAD. I suppose that would be determined on the question of merit.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. I now yield for a question to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I desire to be informed if these 3,480 clerks of the Census Bureau were not appointed upon the recommendation of Congressmen and Senators first.

Mr. HOPKINS. Why, many of them were given places originally on the recommendations made by members of Congress from the House and the Senate; but, as I understand it, no clerk holds a position there who has not passed a rigid examination and been accepted by the Director on merit.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I will ask if that examination was not prepared by the Director instead of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. HOPKINS. The examination was not prepared by the Civil Service Commission, as I understand.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Now, if it be true that out of 3,480 clerks so selected it is a fact that only 20 or 24 have proven inefficient, is it not the judgment of the gentleman that that is a better way to select the employees of the Government than through the ordinary channels of the civil service?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to my friend from Michigan that that question is hardly germane to the proposition now before the House. I repeat, however, my assertion that there is no more efficient corps of clerks in any department of the Government than the one presided over by the Director of the Census.

Mr. MADDOX. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia for a question

Mr. MADDOX. I want to inquire whether this is a bill for the benefit of the United States or for the benefit of the clerks in that department?

Mr. HOPKINS. Why, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Georgia had read the reports that have been submitted I do not think he would have asked that question. The bill is prepared for the benefit of the Government of the United States, and for this especial service. That it is some benefit to the clerks, in my judgment, is not detrimental to the bill. Now I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HAMILTON. I want to inquire what the annual salary expenditure for this Bureau is at this time.

Mr. HOPKINS. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars a

Mr. HAMILTON. And that would be reduced by how muchsay next year?

Mr. HOPKINS. Sixty or 70 per cent.

Mr. CANNON. But not by virtue of this legislation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana.
Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. What will be the probable cost of the service for the years until the next census is ready to be

Mr. HOPKINS. The work of the Twelfth Census up to the present time has cost the Government $13,516,210, and the estimate for the year 1902-3 is $1,972,126.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I mean for the new force which will be continued after this bill goes into effect?

Mr. HOPKINS. I have no estimate from the Director upon that subject, and it would be a little difficult to determine. The expense of the Bureau is entirely under the control, primarily, as I have already stated, of the Committee on Appropriations. The Director of the Census is required to make his estimate for that committee, and he is required to go before the committee and show the necessity for the expenditure of that money. If, in the judgment of the committee, he does not need that amount, it is cut down. If he does not need the force he has estimated for, that force is cut down by the Appropriations Committee and secondarily by Congress itself.
Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. What are the duties and what is the character of the work which Congress is likely to impose upon this Bureau after the work of this census is completed?

Mr. HOPKINS. The Census Report covers four great subjects which are to be completed by the 1st of July of the present year. Gentlemen will remember that under section 8 of the law as Gentlemen will remember that under section 8 of the law as originally adopted it is provided for the continuation of this work for the collection of statistics on special subjects, such as crime, pauperism, benevolence, deaths and births, social statistics of cities, wealth, debt, and so on, covering nine or ten different subjects that will require a force of 700 or 800 skilled employees in the Department for the part three or four years.

the Department for the next three or four years.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And after that time until the next census is ready to be taken, what will they be engaged in?

Mr. HOPKINS. During that period until the next census the force will be reduced in number, and they will be making preparations for taking the Thirteenth Census under more favorable auspices and more favorable conditions than the previous census was taken, and, as all experts claim, at a much less expense

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And that reduction will be controlled by the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, entirely.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman from Illinois answer a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsyl-

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman has partially answered in his last statement the question I wanted to ask. As I understand, the four main subjects in the Twelfth Census are to be reported upon and concluded by the 1st day of June of the current year. The other special reports are to be closed up by June 30, 1903. Thereafter, in effect, the temporary Census Office goes out of existence. The law is specific—

Mr. HOPKINS. My friend from Pennsylvania is in error when he says the special subjects are to be concluded in the year following, that relates to mineral end wining.

ne says the special subjects are to be concluded in the year following; that relates to mines and mining.

Mr. BINGHAM. It relates to all of them.

Mr. HOPKINS. I beg the gentleman's pardon—

Mr. BINGHAM. Well, lay that aside. I desire to know if this bill for a permanent bureau goes into effect if it will in any way extend the fixed limits of your present census law—closing out certain subjects by June 30, 1902, and closing out the detailed report in 1903?

Mr. HOPKINS. Not at all. That work will be prosecuted and completed within the limitations of the law.

Mr. BINGHAM. What do you mean in this bill when you say:

"And all provisions of said act and acts amendatory thereof not inconsistent with this act are hereby continued in force?"

Mr. HOPKINS. One of the reasons why that is put in is that by section 2 of the original act it provides that nothing herein contained shall be construed to establish a census bureau as a permanent part of the Twelfth Census.

Mr. BINGHAM. And you annul that by this act? Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. And you annul every paragraph in your existing law.

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, no; only parts of acts inconsistent with this bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. If the gentleman will look at section 8 of the original law, he will see that it is to be concluded by June

Mr. HOPKINS. That relates to mines and mining, which is to be completed by the 1st of July, 1903; but there are eight or nine other subjects which Congress has authorized reports upon which are not concluded at that time.

Mr. BINGHAM. They are to be continued?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.
Mr. BINGHAM. Therefore, this permanent bureau would have to start at once this body of work, other than mines and mining?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.
Mr. BINGHAM. That is the information I wanted to obtain.
Mr. SULZER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois this question: Is it not a fact that the only purpose of this bill is to have Congress make permanent the Census Bureau as an ad-junct of the Government?

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman is correct.
Mr. SULZER. And all these other matters involved in the questions which are being asked will come up in the future?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMILTON. I wish to ask the gentleman whether this

Mr. HAMILTON. I wish to ask the gentleman whether this 60 to 70 per cent reduction in the cost of running the Bureau, which he says is proposed, is to be accomplished by this bill, Mr. HOPKINS. Let me say to my friend that the bill provides for certain chiefs and a certain number of clerks, and then the other force will be increased or decreased to meet the exigencies of the Bureau. It will be entirely within the power of the Committee on Appropriations of the House to decline to report appropriations for even that number, if they find that the necessities of the service do not require such appropriathe necessities of the service do not require such appropria-tions. When I spoke of a reduction of expenditures to the amount of 60 or 70 per cent, I meant that when the Director of the Census makes his report, as he is required to do under the law, to the Committees on Appropriations of the House and Senate, that reduction will then be provided for by the men who have charge of the purse strings of the Government, and who are supposed to the purse strings of the Government, and who are supposed to do their duty and not make appropriations to continue any force beyond the number required to do the work.

Mr. HAMILTON. Supposing that the Committee on Appropriations are willing to provide for the expenditure, how much will it cost to continue the Bureau in efficient service?

Mr. HOPKINS. According to my judgment—of course this is only an estimate-the reduction of expense would be 60 or 70 per cent

Mr. BINGHAM. With reference to the Committee on Appropriations, does the gentleman assume in his answer that the committee can call before them the Director of the Census, with no other statute authorizing them to do so than the act making the Bureau permanent, and may thus pass judgment upon what the Director recommends and may report appropriations accordingly?

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania must understand that we continue in force the law creating the Bureau and defining the separate divisions and specifying the character of the work

Mr. BINGHAM. The character of the work in the future?
Mr. HOPKINS. The Committee on Appropriations has already absolute control of the amount of the appropriations; that power you have already given; and the appropriations have been based upon the reports to the committee made by the Director of the

Mr. BINGHAM. That has been done under the present law?
Mr. HOPKINS. The present law is to be continued in force.
Mr. BINGHAM. The whole law?
Mr. HOPKINS. The whole law.
Mr. BINGHAM. This service has cost $15,000,000 already.
Mr. GROSVENOR. Will not the result of the present legislation be to continue the power of the Director to make appointments in the permanent Bureau outside of the civil-service law?
Mr. HOPKINS. I think not.
Mr. GROSVENOR. Well. let us see. I read from the bill:

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, let us see. I read from the bill:

And all provisions of said act and acts amendatory thereof, not inconsistent with this act, are hereby continued in force.

One of the provisions of the law organizing this Bureau was that these appointments be made independently of the civil-service law. Now, is that provision inconsistent with any provision of this bill; and if not, will it not remain in force?

Mr. HOPKINS. It would be inconsistent, because the Civil Service Commission has given a decision that a permanent bureau stands on a different footing from a temporary one; that to a permanent bureau the civil-service rules will apply; and if they do apply, of course the provision of the present law which the gentleman has just referred to would be inconsistent with the rules governing a permanent bureau.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then, in the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois, the provisions of the civil-service law would be applied or might be applied not only to the appointment of new clerks in this Bureau, but also to the clerks to be transferred to new bureaus

Mr. HOPKINS.

Mr. HOPKINS. No; I think not. Mr. GROSVENOR. Then would it not be wise to make such provision now? Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. HOPKINS. Well, it was the judgment of the committee, after mature deliberation, that it would be better to leave the bill in its present form than to make any such alteration as suggested.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would not undertake to put the bill into any shape that would not coincide with the views of the commit-But at the same time I am anxious that these clerks, coming into the service as they did by a method which I approve—it has that much in its favor [laughter]—shall now have the full benefit of the splendid record which they have made. They came in upon nominations by Congressmen, from every district in the United States. They stood the kind of examination that we are all in favor of; they have distinguished themselves by their service; and I want them now to have an opportunity to stay in the service without coming again in competition with the graduates of the high schools of the villages of the United States. [Applause.] Mr. Sims rose

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr.

SIMS]

Mr. SIMS. If this bill should pass just as it is, may not every Democratic clerk now in the Census Bureau be discharged (if there is any disposition to discharge him) between now and the time when the President may take action, putting those clerks under civil-service rules?

Several Members. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. I want an answer to that question. Mr. HOPKINS. I think it is unnecessary to answer that.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think it is unnecessary to answer that.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman refuse to answer it?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to my friend from Tennessee that that is a contingency the arising of which is improbable, from the very fact that if the Director of the Census, in collecting this force, recognized the Democratic party, as the gentleman seems to suggest he did recognize it, he would not now, in the eleventh hour of this service, turn around and discharge all of those clarks. charge all of those clerks.

Mr. SIMS. I do not think so; but why not remove the possibility of such a danger by putting a provision in the law?

Mr. HOPKINS. That possibility is so absolutely remote that it would seem unnecessary to legislate on the subject.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Is it not a fact that when they come here to this Bureau and come in contact with information, they lose their Democracy? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

sachusetts

Mr. THAYER. I should like to ask the gentleman a question, though possibly he has given the information already, been so much confusion that I did not hear all he said. ber that these places were originally filled by the different States, each member having the right to recommend a certain number of course the Democrats a less number than the Republicans, but we were fairly treated. I want to ask now, if there is any rule or scheme by which the 1,900 are to be taken and the 700 left, whether the 700 left there are to be apportioned throughout the States; whether each member will have anything to say about retaining an employee, or whether they shall be dismissed on their merits or demerits?

Mr. BINGHAM. It will be a survival of the fittest.
Mr. HOPKINS. Nothing has been done upon that subject in any form. If the number is to be reduced to 700, I understand that merit will control the retention of the 700, and that alone, and I have no question, of course, but what the question of the distribution of the places over the States will be properly considered.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman from Illinois will allow me for a moment, I am informed by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Moody], now presiding in the Committee of the Whole, that two Attorneys-General have decided that under a law similar to this the President can not extend the civilservice rules either to the appointment or the promotion of clerks where Congress has provided a method of selection. Now, if that be correct, and I have no doubt about it, and I state it upon the authority which I have given, then we shall find ourselves in this condition if this bill passes: The number will be reduced peremptorily by a mandatory statute, and no provision for the future care of the men and women who go out; and I want to suggest— I am not going to offer an amendment, for these are delicate questions when I undertake to handle them—I want to suggest to my friend whether it would not be wise to put a simple section in this bill providing that the civil-service law shall or may, and I do not care what the term is, be extended—that the President may be authorized to extend the provisions of the civil-service law to the surplus clerks in this Department. I believe that is what the gentleman wants, and I believe it can be done now better than at any other time.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to my friend from Ohio that that subject was thoroughly canvassed in the committee of the House, and, as I understand it, has also been convassed by the Committee of the Census of the Senate, and that they all agreed with the Director of the Census that the method provided in the bill is better, and will be as efficacious to the clerks as the method suggested by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then I am content.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, I do not desire to take up any further time. I understand there are one or two gentlemen in the House who desire to oppose any legislation looking to the establishment of a permanent bureau, and I will therefore reserve what time I have and yield to any gentleman who desires to oppose the measure

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois inform the Chair whether any gentleman who is a member of the committee proposes to oppose this bill?

Mr. HOPKINS. The committee were unanimous in reporting the bill. There is no division whatever on that subject among the members of the Committee on the Census.

the members of the Committee on the Census.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Burkett] in opposition to the bill.

Mr. Burkett. Mr. Chairman, in opposing this bill I realize that I am getting, perhaps, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Grosvenor] said, on pretty touchy ground. But, sirs, I am opposed to this bill in the first place because I believe it is improper, but more especially because I believe it is inopportune at this particular time. And, further, I am opposed to its passage for the reason that, as this argument has developed, the matter contemplated by the bill has not been sufficiently digested to advise us of what sort of a bill we ought to pass at this particular time.

When it was suggested to me that we were going to make a permanent census bureau, I supposed we would pass a law creating a permanent census bureau, and provide in detail for its organization and define its functions and prerogatives. And when I saw yesterday this bill, with only nine lines, reenacting another law, that was made for a different purpose, to perform this purpose, I began an inquiry as to the terms of that law which this bill proposes to reenact. I will give, just as briefly as I can, why in my judgment this particular bill ought not to pass. When we pass this law it will provide in its own words:

That the Census Office created by an act entitled "An act to provide for

That the Census Office created by an act entitled "An act to provide for the taking of the Twelfth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1890, be, and the same hereby is, made a permanent bureau of the Government, and all provisions of said act and acts amendatory thereof not inconsistent with this act are hereby continued in force.

Now, the next question, gentlemen, for us to see is what are the provisions of "the act of March 3, 1899, and all the amendatory acts thereto." In addition to the original act there have been amendatory acts passed since that time; and by the terms of this law, which the Census Committee have asked us to reenact, not only the one for the taking of the Twelfth Census, but also the other three amendatory acts passed since that time are reenacted into

In the first place, I address myself to the report of the committee. I ask, what reasons have the committee suggested for making a permanent census and how do they conclude that those other laws are adequate for its workings? The chairman of the committee has gone over those reasons this morning, and I want briefly to suggest them to this House at this time. The first reason they give, on the first page of their report, is because it "has been agitated for many years."

Now, I asked myself the question, by whom has this been agitated? If you go back and look over the reports of the hearings before the several committees that have been had heretofore, you will find that it has been agitated by the Superintendents and Directors of Censuses and specially employed statisticians. These are the men who have appeared before committees heretofore, in the main, and asked for a permanent census bureau.

The second reason given is that "the Senate" in 1891 asked the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior as to the advisability of creating a permanent census bureau. He turned it over to the Superintendent of the Census, who in turn made a report of several hundred pages, embodying in it the opinions of statisticians and divers other persons. The third reason assigned is because Mr. Porter, Superintendent of the Eleventh Census, had recommended it; and fourth, because a select committee of the Fifty-second Congress had considered a resolution which they brought in at that Congress and upon which nothing more was done. because it was agitated in the Fifty-fourth Congress, and that in hearings of this Congress the Director of the Census has said that it should be made permanent.

These are the reasons assigned here for a permanent bureau of census. None others have been assigned by the chairman of the committee. Now, I do not believe myself in a permanent census bureau under present conditions. Then, too, if this House wants bureau under present conditions. Then, too, if this House wants to make a permanent census bureau, in my judgment this bill is not getting at it in the proper shape. This bill provides that certain laws shall be continued. What are the laws that are going to be continued by enacting House bill 198 into law?

Let me call your attention to it. It is an act giving to the Director of the Census a salary of $7,500, a salary within $500 of any Cabinet officer, a salary $1,500 greater than the head of any bureau in all governmental department service. Why was that salary given? The salary for the Director of the Census as originally fixed was $6,000. Along about a year later the Committee on Census came in and said to us that he had a big job, that he had 3,000 clerks and many thousand enumerators and was disbursing $10,000,000, and ought to have more salary.

very generously gave $1,500 more salary

Now it is proposed to enact that into a permanent law and give him $7,500, the same amount that was given when he was doing a vast amount of work, and to give it to him from this year until 1910, when he has scarcely anything to do, according to his own report. You propose to give him the same as when he was loaded for bear while he is shooting jacksnipes between 1903 and 1910, when he has nothing to do, as he says, except to figure out the plan to take the Thirteenth Census.

That is what he says himself—that the Director of the Census should have these years to figure out a plan of taking the Thirteenth Census. So I could go through all these various salaries, given after mature consideration, but it was for specific work to be done in this specific way.

Mr. HULL. Was it not given, too, because it was temporary?

Mr. HULL. Was it not given, too, because it was temporary?
Mr. BURKETT. I am glad the gentleman called my attention to that fact. It was argued that as it was only temporary a man of sufficient ability could not leave his work and come here and take a temporary salary of $6,000. I am glad the gentleman made that suggestion. Then, when you take the chief clerk, who was afterwards allowed $300 for taking care of the building, and for which there was a special law passed raising his salary really because "there was a great amount of work to be done;" and because "there was a great amount of work to be done;" "that it was a hard-pushed force;" "a hard-worked department," and Congress very generously raised his salary for that sort of business. Now, this law reenacts all those laws. Let me call the attention of the House to this matter. I am going to submit the acts of Congress which provides what shall be paid.

In this law there are two sorts of officers and two sorts of sala-In this law there are two sorts of officers and two sorts of salaries provided for. In the first place, the original bill enumerates certain offices that "shall" be created. It does not say that they "may" be created. It says that there "shall" be a Director, there "shall" be an assistant, there "shall" be a chief clerk, etc. Now, these salaries foot up $93,300 per annum, which the bill specifically says "shall" be maintained. For instance, there shall be 45 clerks at a thousand dollars each.

You can't cut it down, for the law says there shall be 45. There shall be 5 expert chiefs. It says "shall be;" there is no "may be" about it. If you enact this into law the old law obtains, and there will be that many expert chiefs. The old law says there shall be a disbursing officer at $2,500 a year. In short, take all these together and the law specifically provides that there shall be $93,300 a year paid in salaries.

Now, in addition to that, the law provides that there "may be" certain additional employees, such as charwomen, stenographers, copyists, computers, skilled laborers, etc., as the Director may think advisable and necessary. Footing these up, which the Director of the Census has put in his report in a statement as being necessary for the census has put in his report in a statement as being necessary for the next year, and will be retained, no doubt, in connection with the office force, it makes $116,300 per annum that the law practically makes mandatory.

In addition to this there are all the other clerks, charwomen, messengers, janitors, etc., that would be necessary with such a force as this. In short, this law that they are asking us to pass continues that in force. That executive force was organized to take the Twelfth Congress when we had $400 clerks when we had take the Twelfth Census, when we had 3,400 clerks, when we had 60,000 enumerators going over the country taking the enumera-tions, when we had 300 supervisors in various districts through-That organization was made to take care of that out the country. That organization was made to take care of that work. Now, this bill proposes to continue all of them, or nearly all of them, in time of comparatively little work.

Now, they speak about what we are going to continue. bill does not provide for the continuing of a single one of those girls down there. It does not provide that there shall be retained down there a single clerk that the gentleman from Ohio or any other gentleman has recommended; but it does specifically provide that there shall be retained a Director of the Census, the assistant, the chief clerk, and the disbursing clerk, and the stenographers, and 45 clerks that I have enumerated. Those are spe-

Now, I take this position: It is possible that the committee did not consider that proposition. I want to be as charitable as possible. They, possibly, have not thought that by the terms of the old law when they reenacted it this large force was absolutely continued. Who knows about these 45 clerks, the 5 chief experts? Suppose one of them resigns; they must, by the terms of the law, go and hunt up another.

Here is another thing in these laws that this bill continues. year or two ago the Director of the Census came and asked for an appropriation for him to buy books, and the committee brought in a bill permitting the Director of the Census—an innocent bill—to buy such books of reference as he needed. What do you suppose he has got? A 6,000-volume library down there as the result of the permission given in that little innocent bill. Gentlemen, this law, or this bill, reenacts that law and continues it—continues that provision to allow him to buy such books of reference as he says that he needs. Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BURKETT.

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.
Mr. HOPKINS. Does the gentleman state that the Director of the Census has bought a book that was unnecessary in the discharge of his duty as Director of the Census?

Mr. BURKETT. I did not say so.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then why does the gentleman make a reference to the number of volumes?

Mr. BURKETT. Because I find it in his report.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does the gentleman state that it was unnecessary?

Mr. BURKETT. I did not say so.
Mr. HOPKINS. Does the gentleman concede that they were ecessary?

Mr. BURKETT. I do not concede it. I am not criticising the Director of the Census or any act of his. I think it has been one of the most efficient departments of the Government service, but I say this law continues through eight years more if this bill is passed. This is one of the things which, as I understand, may be continued during eight years more. If in two years this officer has bought 6,000 volumes, how many more can he buy in eight years? We are proposing to continue that sort of thing.

The law also contains a clause providing for appointing additional mechanics, clerks, and other employees of that sort. I want to say that I have taken pains to go through all the hear-ings before all the Senate and House committees on this subject since this project of a permanent census bureau originated.

have read every report and every hearing.

Reports were made by Mr. Walker when he was Superintendent of the Census, by Mr. Porter when he was Superintendent; and they have been made by the very distinguished gentleman who is now the Director of the Census. In these various hearings and reports there have been advanced just two reasons why this Census Bureau should be made permanent: In the first place, for the purpose of retaining a trained force for this work; second, for the purpose of getting out periodical editions of the census reports. Now, I want to take up those two reasons and show the impracticability of this bill.

I first take up the question of retaining trained clerks. I read the first hearing, which was had away back in 1891, I was alarmed for fear we might lose some of these statisticians, these experts, who get up these figures for us. But when I came to the next census I saw the names of the same men whom we had been so much afraid of losing when the previous census was on hand. I found that these gentlemen were still acting as experts in connection with the census. Then when I read the report of the Director of the Twelfth Census I found these same experts doing duty whom it was so much feared we might lose twenty years before unless we made for them permanent offices. I found them still employed as experts in the preparation of the Twelfth

Census.

Now the question comes up, Where do we get those experts?

Where does the law provide that we shall get them? I will tell you where we are training those experts. We are making experts every day; this country is full of experts. We are making those experts in the Departments. This census law under which we have been acting provided that we go to the other Departments and obtain from them such specialists along particular lines as the service might require.

That is where we get our trained experts; and when we get through with them in connection with the pending census we send them back to the Departments to take up their old work until we need them for another census. As I have said, they are all here; we have not lost any of them, so far as I can see, within the last twenty years. I looked to see whether I could find one single expert who had been lost, but I could not. Therefore, this first reason, that we must have a permanent census bureau for the purpose of retaining trained experts, falls to the ground.

The next reason advanced is that the Bureau must be continued in order that we may have periodical editions of statistics relating to the census. The Director of the Census does not say that in his report, so far as I remember, nor is it stated in the report of the committee to which he has contributed more than half. But that is the reason which was advanced by Mr. Walker and Mr. Porter, in order that we might get out editions of the census statistics every once in a while—every year or two. But, sir, the law which this bill proposes to reenact provides that all statistics pertaining this bill proposes to reenact provides that all statistics pertaining to agriculture, to population, to mortality, to manufactures, etc., must be completed by July 1, 1902; and the Director of the Census says that he is going to complete this work by that time.

Then section 8, about which there has been a good deal of difference of opinion, provides further, that all other things, such as special reports upon insanity, pauperism, benevolence, indebtedness, taxation, mining, etc., shall be completed by July 1, 1903.

I know there is a difference as to the construction of this section. I know there is a difference as to the construction of this section.

The chairman of the committee says that only the statistics relating to mines and minerals shall be reported by 1903.

But as you go through the bill you will find it declares that all But as you go through the bill you will ind it declares that all these reports enumerated in section 8 are special reports, and that special reports must be completed in 1903. There is one exception in that respect, to which I wish to call attention; that is the report in regard to the deaf, dumb, and blind. We adopted an amendment to that provision at a later date that the restrictions contained in section 8 should not apply to the statistics in reference to the deaf, dumb, or blind. I take it, therefore, that those statistics, which it would take sixty days, in my judgment, to fix any and report upon would not necessarily be completed by up and report upon, would not necessarily be completed by 1903.

Gentlemen, when Congress passed the bill providing for taking the Twelfth Census it specifically said that we did not want the Census Bureau to be doling out reports every six months for ten We had had an unfortunate experience in connecvears to come. tion with the Eleventh Census, all the reports not being completed until we got ready to take the Twelfth Census; therefore we wanted the Census Bureau to finish its business and make its report before 1903, and that was the specific enactment of the law; yet in this bill, which proposes to reenact the old law with all those old clauses, we do not give this Bureau a solitary additional thing to do after the work already provided for shall have been finished according to the requirements of the existing law.

In short, from 1903 until 1910, will any gentleman in this House rise up and tell me what the Director of the Census and these 45 clerks and these stenographers that the law says he must have are going to do? The Director of the Census tells us. In his part of the report he suggests a permanent census bureau, and he says that by July 1, 1902, the reports on population, agriculture, mining, and vital statistics will be completed, at which time it is expected the clerical force will be reduced to 800. He says:

The special subjects required to be inquired into, * * * * so far as the same can be estimated at the present time, will require a clerical force of 750 or 800 down to 1905.

Then he says he can reduce it to 200. "Under the present act there are certain inquiries that have to be made yearly in connection with deaths and births," and he is going to have these 200 people make memoranda with reference to births and deaths in this country. Then he is going to have the continuous force of 200 during the balance of the time utilized in making preparation for the census commencing in 1910, for which he tells us "at least three years should be allowed." In short, from 1905 to 1910 he proposes to get ready for the census of 1910.

Now, I went back and inquired as to what time had been given to proving Directors of the Census to get ready for the taking of to previous Directors of the Census to get ready for the taking of the census. I found that in the Eleventh Census you gave them six months, and in the other censuses three or four months-I do not remember just the time. Those Directors had reason to complain of insufficient time to get ready for taking the census, because, for instance, they had to appoint enumerators by telegraph.

The present Director had abundance of time, as has been amply testified to here to-day. He has provided the most efficient corps of clerks that is to be found anywhere in the Government service here to day, and so there is no force in the point that he has not had adequate time to drill and prepare a sufficient and efficient corps of clerks to do the work.

Now, there occurred to me also another proposition, which is this: Is this just the sort of a bureau that we want to prepare our statistics for us that are to come? There are some gentlemen in the House advocating a department of commerce. Now, sir, when that department is created, in my judgment one of its most important functions will be to investigate and prepare statistics When we stop to think that every Department in this Government is preparing statistics for us, then we come to some realization of what the situation is.

The Agricultural Department sends us a volume of excellent statistics every year. The Secretary of the Interior in four places makes up a book of statistics, for example, about irrigation, about which we have heard a good deal lately. The Commissioner of Public Lands makes reports about irrigation. The Commissioner Public Lands makes reports about irrigation. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs gets up statistics about irrigation. The Geological Survey collects statistics about irrigation, and the Census Office furnishes us with statistics about irrigation. Then, too, we get statistics from the Treasury Department.

Why, every month we get a great bulky volume thrown on our desks called the Monthly Summary of Finance and Commerce.

That is in addition to the Treasurer's report. Then comes the Comptroller of the Currency and the report of the Labor Commissioner and the consular reports. In short, there is no end to the Comptroller of the Currency and the report of the Labor Commissioner and the consular reports. In short, there is no end to the statistics that we are getting all the while.

Now, the thought comes, Do we want to create another bureau and not give it any particular work to do, not define their functions or their field of labor, but just say, "Go on there with your high-priced deputies and assistants and your 45 clerks and make up any old kind of statistics that you think might entertain some-body if they take the time to look them over?"

body if they take the time to look them over?"

When you get right down to this proposition, gentlemen, here is what confronts us: This bill does not provide what that Bureau shall do or what it shall be. It reenacts a bill that was created to do a specific thing, and continues it in office and in power after that thing is performed without anything for it to do.

I am going to offer a substitute resolution when the proper time comes, something in words about like this:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 198) to create a permanent census bureau be recommitted to the Select Committee on the Census, with instructions to prepare and report back as a substitute therefor a bill providing for a detailed organization of a permanent census bureau.

If, sir, the committee want to bring in a bill creating a permanent bureau on the census and provide for the make-up of its organization and define its scope of work, then we can take it and vote upon it understandingly and with some effect. Then we can decide whether or not we want those particular enumerated things done. But to ask us to vote this bill through, to make permanent the organization that was created for a specific thing, that will be inharmonious and inadequate, in many directions, for the work that the permanent Census Bureau will have to do, then I repeat what I said in the beginning, that this matter has not been fully digested.

To prove what I say, let me call attention to the way this matter has always been brought up here before. If I am wrong, the chairman of the Committee on the Census [Mr. Hopkins] will correct me, for I do not want to make a statement that is not true. When Mr. Porter came before the House and the Senate and asked that the Bureau be made permanent, when Mr. Walker came before the House and Senate and asked that the Bureau be made permanent, these gentlemen came with a bill— an organic act—creating and establishing a permanent census bureau and defining its functions and prerogatives. in that act for what that bureau was to be created.

They said in that act what the officers should be during "times of peace" and "times of war," during times of lesser activity and times of greater activity. They said what things the Census Bureau should investigate and report upon. In other words, they created or sought to create in that special bill for a permanent census bureau an organic act defining and describing the powers and the prerogatives, and the duties of the census office, which they said they were going to create.

Now, sir, we have no such thing as that in this bill before us to-day. Take this law that created our present Bureau. If you will examine it, you will see that it was not created for a permanent bureau, for in that act there is this clause:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to establish a census bureau permanent beyond the Twelfth Census.

The House considered it, and the Senate considered it, and enacted that law and made up the machinery and the personnel of the executive force to take the Twelfth Census. It was not done for a permanent bureau, because you put in that clause "that nothing herein contained shall be construed to establish a census bureau permanent;" and yet the committee is asking this House to undo that and make this thing just exactly what the House said in 1899 it ought not to be.

I said in the beginning that I was opposed to this because it was apportune. I do not think the time has come yet to say to inopportune. these persons that we are going to perpetuate them in office. We do not know that we shall need them when the time comes. Until a year from next July these people down there in the Census Bureau will be engaged in the work of the Twelfth Census. Until that time there is no necessity for creating a permanent census. Until that time Congress can digest this matter, in conjunction with the Director of the Census, and see what officers he ought to have and provide for the details.

So that I say that this matter is inopportune at this time, to bring it up at the beginning of this session, before these clerks are discharged, when they are coming to us daily begging and petitioning us to intercede in their behalf in order that they may retain their positions longer. It is not proper at this particular time, under that sort of duress, that we should bring in this sort. of a bill. Why, sir, some clerks came to me last night and said, "Are you in favor of turning us out?" I told them, "Not until your work is performed; but as soon as your work is done you ought to go home."

But there is not a single thing in the bill sought to be passed ere that will retain any of those clerks in their position. It prohere that will retain any of those clerks in their position. It provides for the heads of departments, the chief statisticians, the chief experts, and the Director, that they are to be retained; but there is not a word here that retains a single one of those clerks. But, as has been brought out by the argument here, there is nothing to prevent their discharge down to the limit before they are put under the civil-service rules.

I know that they are an efficient force. They have done more than any other similar number of clerks in the Departments by 50 per cent, I believe. The temporary clerks of the War Department and the clerks put in here in the rural free-delivery service and the census clerks have proved to be the most efficient force that we have had here in the Government service; but there is nothing in this bill that protects those clerks.

A large number of these clerks have been recommended by members of Congress, and the gentlemen recommending them were careful, no doubt, to recommend only efficient ones, and the fact has been brought out by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Grosve-NOR] that there are only 20 who have proved incompetent. That demonstrates the honesty of members of Congress for the Government's welfare in recommending these clerks.

Let us recommit this bill to the Committee on Census, and let them get down to the matter, and go over their report, two-thirds of which has been written by the Director of the Census. Let this House and the Committee on the Census dig into this thing and find out what the Census Bureau ought to do. Let them properly segregate the statistical work of the various departments or collect it all under one head. We have a great labor commission here; and I want to read to you, and show to this House, that when a hearing was had before a House committee and Mr. Wright was called before it, he was asked this question: "What about your Bureau, for instance?" Mr. Wright says, "Our Bureau is practically a census bureau."

Think of it. The Labor Commissioner says to us:

Our Bureau is practically a census bureau, so far as special investigations are concerned. We make original investigations only. We take up such topics as Congress designates, either by general acts or special resolutions, or such as in the discretion of the Commissioner ought to be carried on.

Yet the chairman of this committee says that we want to create another bureau here, to which we can refer some resolutions and ask them under a special law to figure upon it. In short, this Government is filled up with departments and bureaus and or-Government is filled up with departments and bureaus and organizations that are duplicating their work. Let me quote from Mr. Porter along the same line.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does the gentleman say that Mr. Wright's bureau is duplicating any work done by the Census Bureau?

Mr. BURKETT. Did the gentleman understand me to say that?

Mr. HOPKINS. Then for what purpose did the gentleman read the remarks of Mr. Wright? Was it not to convey the idea to the members of the House that his work is duplicating the work of the Bureau? I deny that it is.

Mr. BURKETT. If I conveyed that idea to the members of the House, I beg the House's pardon.

Mr. HOPKINS. All right; go on.

Mr. BURKETT. I do not think that any gentleman thought that I was conveying that impression. I read Mr. Wright's words. He said his Bureau was the census bureau for certain special things which the House referred to it by resolution. Now, the gentleman said that the reason for perpetuating this Census Bureau was that we might have a place, by special resolution, to refer certain things which it wanted to have referred. Mr. HOPKINS. Are any of the special things referred to the Bureau of Labor covered by any of the work of the Census

Mr. BURKETT. Well, I do not know that there are; but it would not be surprising if there were a good many, I will say this much to the gentleman, since the matter has been brought up, that the organic act creating the Labor Commissioner's Bureau has this provision: That it shall, from time to time, make statistics and report on manufactures and manufacturing. So I do know that it duplicates in that particular, but whether it does in any other or not I do not now know. I know that the census act provides specifically for that too.

Now, before the House committee this question was asked by Mr. Henderson: "If we make the Census Office permanent, why can we not wipe out the Bureau of Labor and the Bureau of Sta-can we not whee out the Bureau of Labor and the Bureau of Sta-tistics?" And this is what Mr. Walker stated in reply: I see no reason to the contrary. I insisted twenty years ago that either the Bureau of Statistics should take the Census Office or that the Census Office should take the Bureau of Statistics.

Now, I insist that that only reenforces what I have said, that we do not yet know what we want to create or what we want to make up these statistics. We do not know whether we want a bureau up these statistics. We do not know whether we want a bureau of commerce, a labor commission, or a permanent census bureau to undertake all the work. We do know that we want to create a bureau of some kind, but it is not the kind provided for in this bill

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.
Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does not the gentleman think the very statement of fact which he is now making, and in which

I agree with him thoroughly, that there is an immense amount of duplication of statistical work, is an argument in favor of a permanent bureau of the census, so that all of the statistical work being done in the various departments can gradually be consolidated in one place, and thereby prevent duplication?

Mr. BURKETT. I will say that the resolution which I expect to offer plainly indicates that position which I stated a moment ago. I do believe that this matter ought to be digested and straightened out. I remember that the Secretary of Agriculture somewhere-I do not remember where I have seen it-said that a census bureau or some bureau could be created upon which they could rely for statistics, and that a great deal of their work to-day could rely for statistics, and that a great deal of their work to-day could be turned over to it, and should be. But this bill reenacting an old law, made for certain things, does not provide for a permanent census bureau, as I think it ought to be, and as I believe the gentleman from Mississippi thinks it should be.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does not the gentleman understand that the committee has taken the position that it did not want to encumber the question with all these other questions, but contemplated that there should be further legislation in relation to the permanent Bureau? Does not he think that that would be the necessary result of this creation and that it would be instantal. the necessary result of this creation and that it would be just what I have suggested and what he desires?

Mr. BURKETT. I do not know what the committee had in mind. The only thing that I think they had in mind was the mind. The only thing that I think they had in mind was the salaries of the directors, and the assistants, and the chief clerk, and these 45 clerks that they have provided for in this bill. [Laughter.] Let me say this to the gentleman. Suppose we create a permanent census bureau and after we get it created they go to work to give it something to do, and in comes the friends of the Agricultural Department and object to turning over any part of their work.

In comes the friends of the Department of Labor and say "No.

In comes the friends of the Department of Labor and say, "No; you can't take that away." And the Treasury Department comes in and says, "You can take nothing away from us." We have created a bureau with $116,000 in salaries, or $800,000 of expense between now and the next census, and we have not provided in the bill anything for all that force to do. I say the better thing to do would be to come in here with a bill thoroughly digested and say we want a bureau for these reasons to do these things.

I forgot to mention one thing, one of the reasons given by the Director of the Census for making a permanent bureau, which seems to me ridiculous. He said that we ought to have one to take care of $100,000 worth of property. The Director says we have got $100,000 worth of property which will go to waste, run away, wear out, mildew. [Laughter.] If we do not have this Census Bureau, $100,000 worth of property will go to pieces, and so we must have the Bureau, at $116,000 a year, making a total of $814,100, to take care of this $100,000 worth of furniture.

Now let me epitomize. I do not believe it right to pass this bill

Now let me epitomize. I do not believe it right to pass this bill at this time. If it is right to pass any bill of this kind, we ought to take it up and regulate its provisions according to the requirements of a "peace basis." In my judgment, during the years when no census will be taken—during the years 1905, 1906, 1907, 1908, 1909—there is no reason why the Director of the Census should receive more salary than the head of any similar bureau.

Here is the Commissioner of Pensions with a salary of $5,000; yet he disburses $140,000,000 annually and has three or four thousand people in his employ. He does more business in detail than the entire Census Bureau, except in the special census year. Then take the Director of the Geological Survey—an expert, trained in his particular line of work, who has given years of study to qualify himself especially for his line of work, which can not be said of the Director of the Census; yet the Director of the Geological Survey receives only $6,000. Then there is a Commissioner of Internal Revenue receiving $6,000; the Labor Commissioner, $5,000; the Commissioner of Patents, $5,000; the Commissioner of Public Lands, $5,000; and, as I have said, the Commissioner of Pensions, $5,000.

In short, this bill proposes to give to the head of one of the bureaus of the Interior Department a salary of $7,500, while the salaries of other heads of bureaus of the same Department are only five thousand or six thousand, as I have just cited. I say this is not right. If we are to put the Census Bureau on a permanent basis, we ought not to give the disbursing officers a salary of $2,500 a year during years when there will be only 200 employees to whom salaries will be disbursed.

In short, this bill as brought before us is not made up on any other basis than that of three years of active work in taking the census. That is the substance of what we are asked to enact into law here to-day. I believe that this measure ought to go back to the Census Committee. They ought to take the whole matter again into consideration. If we are to make a permanent bureau, its officers ought not to receive as high salaries during the period of inactivity, covering six or seven years, as during the rush of work. The committee ought to take the whole thing again into consideration. They ought not to provide merely for the continuation of the Director, with a few officers that happen to belong to the class of chief statisticians, chief experts, chief clerks, etc., but should provide in detail an organization in accordance with the needs of the occasion and for the purposes for which it shall be created. [Applause.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a

by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Burkett] against the proposition for a permanent census bureau. But in the main it strikes me that his arguments, when analyzed, really bear in support of the proposition for a permanent bureau. He made some criticisms of the methods that the committee has recommended in relation to the establishment of this enterprise, but when the matter is looked at from a practical standpoint it seems to me that those objections are untenable. The bill does not seek or purport to change the original census law, but it is simply the first step toward putting this important branch of the Administration upon a scientific and logical basis.

If we should undertake to organize what the gentleman might conceive to be a proper plan for a permanent census bureau, we would at this stage of the proceedings be met with a number of objections. Obstruction would come from this quarter, and that, and the other; and the result would be that the various Departments of the Government would go on collecting statistics under this or that authorization, each on its own account, and duplicating the work in many respects by lack of intelligent cooperation by divisions or bureaus, none of which are properly organized for the business. Thus the Government would never have a permanent census predicated upon a scientific and logical foundation. This bill is the first step toward reducing the whole system to business principles.

If this bill should become a law I hope the time will come in the near future when, so far as practicable, all the fields of investigation and research in which the various Departments of the Government are interested, the securing of knowledge upon all lines affected by the great activities of the Government, shall be put under one central control.

But, Mr. Chairman, even if the original census law should not be amended and its scope enlarged, I think it can be demonstrated that the Bureau ought to be made permanent. Such an arrangement would be cheaper and decidedly better. The practice heretofore has been to provide by special law for taking decennial censuses, and we have had a great rush of work, a bureau to be organized out of untried and inexperienced material and the work to be done within the period of a very few years, and, necessarily, it has been imperfectly done.

The value of statistics depends upon their accuracy; and the work heretofore has been bunched. It has been required to be accomplished within a very short period of time. It seems to me that, upon plain common-sense business principles, if the work which has been done by the temporary census bureaus had been equitably distributed through the decennial period and handled with a smaller and more efficient force better results would have been accomplished at a smaller cost.

I know something, as every other member of this House does, about the disposition of the Departments of the Government to extend and ramify; about the tendency on the part of the great chiefs of the respective bureaus of administration, in studying their own particular affairs, to exalt their special work out of its proper relations, and I know that Congress must always be on guard against abuses along that line.

Eternal vigilance is the price of economy; but I think it is too plain for discussion that the great subject of census gathering, of investigating the various activities of social, political, and economic life, ought to be under one intelligent and permanent head. One of the principal arguments in favor of a permanent bureau is that there may be available at all times trained clerks who are expert statisticians, who may organize the various departments of research and secure the most accurate and the best results at the least possible cost.

This bill provides for the permanency of this force, and upon the statement of the Director, the accuracy of which no one undertakes to question, the present force will be reduced to 700 or 800 be reduced probably to 200.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Burkett] bases his principal argument upon the fact that for an interim of two years, from 1905 to 1907, when they begin to prepare for the Thirteenth Census, there will be nothing, as he says, for this skeleton force to do. That will, in a large degree, depend upon the future action of Congress. When Congress desires an investigation made along any particular line, it may, by resolution, direct the Census Bureau, organized and equipped for permanent work, to do it. It is similar to the provision we made in the last Congress for a Regular Army on a peace and war footing.

On a peace footing skeleton regiments are provided. The principal object of a permanent census bureau is to secure and keep permanently available these major-generals and brigadiers and colonels and captains of the census, who are trained and prepared at all times, whenever they may be required, to organize a force, to carry out and prosecute the inquiries that may be required of them by law. The very purpose of making the census perma-nent is to keep these trained statisticians in the constant employment of the Government and to keep their services constantly available. There will be no question that an abundance of work will be provided for them. Inquiries are coming up every month in the year requiring scientific investigation.

As a matter of economy, I repeat, Mr. Chairman, the making of this Bureau permanent is of sufficient consideration to entitle the measure to the vote of every member of the House

In the Eleventh Census we undertook to gather all the information at one time, and a great volume of work was imposed upon the Bureau organized for temporary purposes, and its work was delayed, some of it for eight or nine years after the facts were collected, so that the official reports of the Bureau were of practically no value. Their value was lost in the delay under that Now, if we can distribute the work of the Census Bureau during the entire period of ten years, so that one branch of information will be obtained one year and another another year, and so on, and reports be given out while the facts are fresh and and so on, and reports be given out while the facts are fresh and of some value, we will not only multiply the efficiency of the work, but we will get better results for the money we appropriate, and I am satisfied that the aggregate cost will be cheaper.

It has been said during the course of this discussion that the Thirteenth Census would require a much larger force of Department clerks than the Twelfth Census. It will, in all probability, unless the Bureau is put upon a permanent basis and the work of that census be distributed equitably, as nearly as may be, through the decennial or census period, and the Bureau equipped so that it may make many important investigations at other times than during the year when the law requires the census of population during the year when the law requires the census of population to be taken. The real history of the country ought to be found in the statistical reports.

In whatever fields of investigation we go it is of prime importance that the results should be as reliable as possible. It may cost more to be accurate and reliable, but more will be realized from the expenditure. If this bill should become a law, I hope to see the expenditure. If this bill should become a law, I hope to see it supplemented by legislation giving the Census Bureau control of the whole subject of statistics as far as practicable. I concede that some of the great departments of the Government must institute investigations on their own account. This always has been the case and always will be; but the expense of the Government may be greatly reduced and its work placed upon a higher standard by combining under one authority all bureaus and divisions of statistics as far as it can be done without impairing the efficiency of administration in any of the departments.

In relation to the question of the civil service, in my opinion, if this bill becomes a law the Civil Service Commission will have no control of appointments in the Census Bureau. The original census law specifically provides for the appointment of clerks in the bureau, hence the Civil Service Commission would be without authority, for it has no power to repeal that law, and the simple change of this Bureau from a temporary to a permanent one does not affect the mode of appointment. It can not affect the mode of appointment.

The clerks and employees already in the service of the Bureau may, by Executive order, be made eligible to transfer into other Departments within the classified service, so that under the law as it will stand if this bill shall be passed appointments will continue to be made in the Census Bureau as they were under the original law

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman will permit me to inter rupt him, I understand him to say that the civil-service law will not be applied to appointments or retentions or transfers of these employees in the Census Bureau.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. My statement was not as broad as that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. My statement was not as broad as that. I said that original appointments—
Mr. BARTLETT. I am afraid the gentleman would be right in making that statement under the bill.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. I made the statement that original appointments in the Census Bureau must be made under the conditions of the original law if this bill pass; but as the President has complete authority over other Departments, he could by Executive order make provision for the transfer of employees of the Census Office to the other Departments. Census Office to the other Departments.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman permit a further interruption?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly.
Mr. BARTLETT. This bill provides for the reenactment of the original bill, where not inconsistent with the present bill. The original act, as the gentleman has just stated, provides that the appointments shall be made regardless of the civil-service Is it the gentleman's opinion that the President, if this bill goes into effect, can put the civil-service law over that force?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not understand that the passage of this bill will in any way affect the character of service under the original law; the appointments would be made just the same. I understand the President has power now to provide for transfer out of the civil service into the classified service. He has the power now to transfer out of the Census Office into the classified service, but no power to apply the civil-service law to the Census

Mr. BARTLETT. Why has he not the power now to apply the civil-service law to the appointment and retention?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Because the bill providing for the Twelfth Census expressly provides for the manner of the appointment of employees. Mr. BARTLETT. That being true, and this bill by expr provision continuing in force all the provisions of the original bill which are not inconsistent with the proposed bill, how can the President, under the construction that the gentleman puts on this bill, extend the civil service to the Census Bureau established under this bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I say the President can not.

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh!
Mr. CRUMPACKER. My position is that the President may provide for transfers from the Census Bureau to other Departments Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman makes a distinction between

Mr. BAKTHEIT. The gentleman makes a distinction between transfer of the men and their appointment.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Why, of course, the distinction is patent, it seems to me, between original appointment and transfer. Because transfer is not mentioned in the original bill it is therefore under the control of the President; but the question of appointment being specifically provided for, the President would have no authority ever it whatever. These is the distinction.

ment being specifically provided for, the President would have no authority over it whatever. There is the distinction.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the gentleman mean that the President can transfer from a bureau or department where appointments are not under the civil service to a position under the civil-service law?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do. I mean that—

Mr. BINGHAM. Appointments can be made noncivil service and then transferred to the civil service.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is just what has been done in the rural

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is what I understand the power of the President to be, because the President has control over the classified service. He makes the rules for the classified service and may repeal or modify them.

Mr. BINGHAM. He must put them in the classified service.
Mr. GROSVENOB. If the gentleman will permit me a suggestion, as I said before, on two occasions the Attorney-General has decided and held that rule applies, as stated in the gentle-man's proposition, that where an act of Congress creating a bureau has provided the manner and mode of appointment there the President has got the power to transfer. That was done in the case of the Library.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is no disagreement between us on that proposition. My position is this: Originally the census bill having provided for the method of appointment, the President has not the power to put it under the civil-service law; but the President has the power to provide for the transfer from that Bureau into the classified service of any other department, because the law is silent upon that point.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I concede the distinction between appointment and transfer.

Mr. MANN. If gentlemen will pardon me, I make the suggestion that the President makes all the rules concerning the enforcement of the civil-service rules

Mr. BINGHAM. Under the statute.

Mr. MANN. Under the statute he makes all the rules, and under the rules he provides that these clerks can be transferred, as he now gives preference or permits old soldiers to be reinstated

Mr. BINGHAM. Let me ask this question for information. Assuming that this bill passes, does not the gentleman know that if it goes into the classified service this rule will prevail? I read from the statute:

Third. Appointment to the public service aforesaid in departments at Washington shall be apportioned among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia upon the basis of population ascertained at the last preceding census.

Would not that part of the statute apply?
Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; that does not apply to transfers.
Mr. BINGHAM. I am not discussing transfers. I am asking

Mr. CRUMPACKER. My position is that the civil-service law could not be made by Executive order to apply to the Census Bureau as it is now organized, or as it will continue to be organized.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then I agree with the gentleman.
Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly. Mr. PADGETT. Is not the whole effect of this bill under consideration to make permanent all of the legislation for the establishment of the Bureau of the Census?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand it to make the Census Bureau a permanent establishment.

Mr. PADGETT. And to make permanent all the legislation on the subject?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And to make permanent all the legislation now in effect that pertains to the subject of the Census Bureau.

Mr. PADGETT. Is there not one provision which provides that appointments may be made without the civil-service exami-

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is correct.

Mr. PADGETT. Under your interpretation, would it not be permissible to have original appointments made in the Census Bureau without the civil-service examination, and then to transfer them into the classified service, and thus avoid the whole civilservice regulation?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is exactly what I have been trying to demonstrate for the last fifteen minutes. I believe the gentleman is correct on that proposition.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this bill ought to pass. has the indorsement of every Superintendent of the Census for the past twenty years, and of most of the expert statisticians of the country. There is no country in civilization that does not maintain a permanent census bureau for the purpose of gathering imporant information for the use of its citizens. This bill comes here with the sanction and is indorsed unanimously by the Committee on the Census. It is a matter which the committee have had under investigation for a number of months. As I said at the outset, it is the first step in placing an important branch of administration upon a business basis, and the power will abide in Congress to increase its functions and modify its character as time and events seem to dictate.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Maddox].

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I arose this morning to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question for information. I said to him from the nature of the questions being asked I was impelled to inquire whether this was a bill in the interest of the employees in the department of the census, or for the benefit of the General Government. He replied to me by referring me to the report, and said if I had read the report I would not have asked the question. I took his advice and I read the report. I confess that I did not know anything about the bill when I came into the Chamber this morning, and tried to get some information.

Now, I understand, from what the gentleman said, the purpose is to perpetuate the office of the Census Bureau and to keep a trained corps of men. That is what they present to us as the object and purposes of this bill. I want to say to you that, if we are to rely upon the report of the committee, it does not do any such thing.

I have listened with great pleasure to the speech of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Burkett]. He has evidently given this question a good deal of thought; he has gone into the matter fully and in detail, and his remarks only confirm a suspicion I had when I first heard the speech of my friend from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins], that this is not the measure we need.

What is this bill? Its purpose is, according to the report of the committee, to reduce this force of the Census Bureau from time to time, beginning with 1903. According to the report, there are to be from the present time until 1903 800 clerks; from 1903 to 1904, 750; from 1904 to 1905, 750.

At that time-Says the report-unless the office is charged with the other work not provided for in the act before referred to, the clerical force will likely be reduced to 240 people, and between the years 1906 and 1908 still further reduced to about 200, and then from 1908 to 1910 reduced to 150.

Now, I should like to inquire what is to become of your permanent force—the "expert" clerks whose retention is recommended by Mr. Carroll D. Wright. What is to become of them if it is the purpose of the bill to bring about this gradual and steady reduction? Let me read from the report which the gentleman has invited me to read:

The Director of the Census appeared before your committee and submitted the attached statement with reference to the force that will be required between the years 1902 and 1910. After the completion of the four general census topics, namely, agriculture, population, vital statistics, and manufactures, which will be July 1, 1902, there are a number of special subjects in section 8 of the act approved March 3, 1899, which will be considered by the Bureau. Upon the completion of these special subjects the office force can be reduced to a mere skeleton organization and the officials afforded time for the consideration of the methods to be be followed in taking the Thirteenth Census

In other words, these gentlemen are to be given time to take into consideration the methods to be adopted in taking the Thirteenth Census—the Superintendent of the Census, with a salary of $7,500 per annum, and 150 assistants making up this skeleton corps. In this way I apprehend some special pets are to be provided for. These are the gentlemen it seems that it is the object of the bill to continue in office after the rest of the force has been dispensed with. Now, gentlemen, do you want to make this a permanent law? Do you want to pay your Superintendent of the Census $7,500 and to retain at high salaries 200 men who are to be his special assistants—these special pets who are to sit down for five years and consider and advise as to what methods should be adopted for taking the census of 1910? That is what the report says they are to do. They will, indeed, have time to sit down and consider; they will have five years for that purpose. Is not this a mere provision of law to authorize sinecures for the Superintendent and these 150 or 200 official pets?

Gentlemen have risen on this side of the House and the other with the special purpose apparently of ascertaining what is to become of certain clerks now employed in this Bureau—whether they can be transferred to other departments or not. I submit that the question should be, Do we want these clerks in the other departments? Are they necessary? If they are not, they ought to go home when we are through with them. Do we need their services any longer in connection with the census? If we do not, then we should send them away.

Is it the purpose of this Congress to sit here and vote away the people's money in order to continue in office a few men—or I ought rather to say a good many—because they happen to be some of our constituents, when we do not need them? Has any gentleman on this side of the House said to himself, "I have a constituent employed down there, and I must vote for this bill in order to protect him." Is that the duty of a legislator?

The question ought to be, Do we need this Bureau? If so, is this a proper bill for the continuation of the census service? Is this a measure that we ought to pass? After hearing the remarks of the gentleman from Nebraska, I am convinced that if it is proper and necessary to pass a measure of this kind this is not the one that we need. This bill ought to be sent back to the committee that they may frame a proper bill for a permanent organiza-tion and not adopt a measure which was evidently intended for a temporary organization.

The interest here, as I have intimated, seems to be centered ainly in the employees of this Bureau. The question seems to mainly in the employees of this Bureau. The question seems to be, What is to become of them? When they came here they came with the understanding they were to get temporary employment only. Now is it the intention of the House to make that employment permanent merely for the sake of retaining them in their places? Gentlemen on this side of the House, who stand for economy, for honest administration, can you afford to go before economy, for honest administration, can you afford to go before your people and the country and say that you voted for this bill in order to save the positions of employees in the Census Department in whom you are interested? If this bill passes, the question will be asked you by the country, Was it necessary, and if necessary, was this a proper bill? Has it been properly guarded?

Why, sir, take the report of this committee; and, as I have said, it does not propose to provide for continuing in service these expert clerks. That is not the object. It does provide for perpetuating the term of the superintendent and about 150 special assistants. But what is to become of the others? When the gen-assistants. But what is to become of the others? When the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] interrogated his colleague [Mr. HOPKINS] my understanding was it was stated that it would require 100,000 men to take the next census in proper time. Now, here are 150 only of these experts whom you propose to keep in office. What is to become of your corps of experts?

I insist, Mr. Chairman, it looks to me like an effort to retain by law certain pets in office at the expense of the Government whose duties, after 1905 until 1910, according to the report of the committee, shall be to sit down and consider the methods to be followed in taking the Thirteenth Census. That is a nice thing for the clerks, but how about the people who pay the expenses?

Now, just what these special pets are to get in this matter, what their salaries are to be, I do not know, but I do say to the gentlemen here that this bill ought to be referred back to that committee, with directions from this House that they bring in a guarded in every respect and particular, specifically setting forth what these people are expected to do, and not adopt this measure; and I trust that gentlemen on this side of the House will not be controlled by the mere fact that they have constituents in that department, but will stand for what is right in this matter, for honesty and economy in the expenditures of the Government, and will consider the necessity of the law rather than the protection of some constituent. [Applause on the Democratic side.]
Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr.

HEMENWAY] ten minutes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, at the proper time I shall introduce the following amendment, which I shall be pleased to have the Clerk read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the proposed amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

Persons employed in the Census Office shall be eligible to appointments within the classified service without examination or certification by the Civil Service Commission on the approval of the head of any Department.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman from Indiana a question right there?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes; but I have only ten minutes, and I hope the gentleman will make it brief.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Just one question. Do you see any objection to adding to that amendment a further provision that they shall be eligible for five years? Because there are many of these clerks, and we are told that they are worthy people, and perhaps the limitation of a year prescribed in the civil-service rules will be too short a limit.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman desires to do so, at the proper time he can offer that amendment; but I will say to him—
Mr. MANN. The gentleman will note that there is no limit of time in this provision at all.
Mr. HEMENWAY. I was about to say that there is no limit

Now, gentlemen, there are two reasons why I offer this amendment. In the first place I believe that the Government is entitled to the service of experienced clerks, and these gentlemen whom I seek to make eligible to transfer have some of them had two years' experience and some of them more. There is another and greater reason why I believe this amendment ought to be adopted.

To-day, in the departments, I believe I am safe in saying we have 10 per cent of incompetent clerks. Why are they retained there? They are retained because no one is specially interested in getting them out. They are retained because no member of Congress will go to the head of a Department and say "These people ought to go out." If you turn loose here in the city of Washington 2,000 experienced clerks—2,000 competent clerks—you will have 357 members of Congress going to your different Departments and urging that the incompetent fellows get out and some of these men get in. In that way I think we will get rid of a few of the incompetent clerks in the Departments.

Mr. FLEMING. Does not the gentleman think, also, that he will get rid of all the Democrats and put some Republicans in?
Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not care to discuss that question; but the fact that the Director of the Census gave to the minority a proportionate representation ought to be some evidence that the Republican party wanted to be fair. I have no recollection of any time when a Democratic Administration was in power when the Republicans were given any representation in a census bureau; whereas under this Administration each Democratic member was given his share of clerks.

Mr. FLEMING. Ah!

Mr. HEMENWAY. Not perhaps so large a share as the Republicans, but he was given representation, and I believe the Director of the Census was right in that respect. But I can not give up more of my time to questions, because I want to go further.

Mr. FLEMING. Very well; I will endeavor to get some time

Mr. HEMENWAY. I believe there is another reason why this bill ought to be amended. It fixes the salary of the Director of the Census at $7,500 per year. That salary is all right now, but it ought not to be enacted into permanent law. It is said that the Committee on Appropriations can change that; but I want to call the attention of the members of the House to the fact that the Committee on Appropriations can not.

When we come in here with the legislative bill later on, when when we come in here with the legislative oil later on, when the force has been decreased, and we undertake to reduce the salary, any member of the House may arise here and make the point of order, and the point of order would have to be sustained by the Chair, that a reduction would be a change of existing law, and the salary would be continued at $7,500. For that reason, I believe that if this salary is fixed at $7,500, it ought to be for the fiscal year 1903. I have no doubt that the Director of the Census will earn that salary for the fiscal year 1903, and possibly longer. He has been one of the most efficient officers in the Government, and I have the highest regard for him, and his salary at present is not, in my opinion, too high. But as this force decreases, these salaries ought to be decreased, and for that reason they ought not to be enacted into permanent law.

I want to call the attention of the House to the cost of the Census Bureau during the years from 1895 up to 1900. In 1895 they expended $135,000. After that the force dropped down until in 1896 we expended only $10,000, and for the years following we expended $6,800. So you can see that during the last five years before the next census will be taken it would be ridiculous to have a Director of the Census receiving $7,500 and having probably only 30 or 40 men under him.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman from Indiana will allow

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman from Indiana will allow me, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The present Census Bureau is established as a temporary bureau. The law provides for a temporary bureau. If we create a permanent bureau, the mere fact of making it a permanent bureau does not enact into permanent law the salaries that these employees shall now be paid.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If this bill passes it enacts into permanent law the present law, salaries and all. In other words, you fix the salaries when it becomes a permanent bureau; and if on the legislative bill two years from now we come in and provide for a salary of $5,000 for the Director of the Census, any gentleman can make the point of order that it is in violation of existing law, and the salary would remain $7,500.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This says nothing about continuing the

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, yes; it continues the whole bill, letter by letter and word by word; so that it would fix the salaries as fixed in this bill.

Mr. SULZER. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana to say that he is opposed to continuing the salary of the Director of the Census at $7,500?

Mr. HEMENWAY. No, not now; not for the services of this year, for the work that he is now performing. But two years from now, when this force has been decreased, when his during the salary performing that the following the produced to a great artest than it would not be found. from now, when this force has been decreased, when his duties have been reduced to a great extent, then it would not be fair to pay the Director of the Census $7,500 a year while the Commissioner of Pensions is only receiving $6,000, the Director of the Geological Survey only $6,000, and many of the officials of the Government having great responsibilities and large forces would be receiving less than he would with probably only 40 people under his direction. So for that reason the salaries under this bill should be fixed for the fiscal year 1903, so that as the force decreases proper salaries could be provided for.

Why, gentlemen can see that in 1896, 1897, 1898, 1899, and 1900 the force we carried was only paid $6,800. Why, under these circumstances, of course, it would be ridiculous to maintain the large salaries provided for in this bill. I believe in having this as a permanent bureau for many reasons, but in doing it we ought to do it along proper lines; we ought to provide proper ought to do it along proper lines; we ought to provide proper salaries, and we ought to be very careful in creating a new bureau that we are not taking care of a whole lot of employees the Government has no use for.

I think by adopting the amendment that I shall suggest the Government will be given the service of those clerks who have been appointed, by making them eligible to transfer, and result, as I believe, in getting many incompetents out of the service, and men who are competent to perform the duties to be transferred from the Census Bureau to their places.

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr.

BELL] for five minutes.

Mr. BELL. I have a motion I desire to make at the proper time, and I will ask that it now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

I move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Census, with instructions to report a bill for a permanent bureau of census, with all essential provisions for its government, and to provide that the present employees of the Census Bureau shall be placed under the civil service and transferred to other De-

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, now I am in favor of the enactment of a law for a permanent census, and was in favor of this bill, not having examined it, until I heard the gentleman from Nebraska; and he developed the fact that we are now attempting to reenact a code of temporary statutes into a code of permanent statutes, without an opportunity of amending, correcting, or considering a change in any manner. It seems to me that this House will insist that the Committee on the Census make a complete bill, with all the essential features, with salaries in harmony with the salaries of other departments, bring it back here and there is no doubt that this House will pass it by an overwhelming majority.

But as we are now, under this bill, we have not an opportunity of correcting the salary of any officer to make it in harmony with of correcting the salary of any officer to make it in harmony with other officers occupying like responsibilities. In the first place the salary of the Director of the Census was $6,000. The argument was made here, and effectually made, that he had a rush job, with raw recruits, and that he had to give up his business for a temporary employment, and we raised the salary $1,500. That might be all right as to a temporary employment. Now that this temporary place is to be made a permanent one, the salary ought to be reduced to $6,000, if not $5,000. The salary ought not to be raised for a permanent place to within $500 of a Cabinet position, or within $500 of that of the Speaker of this House.

We ought to have every provision of this bill before us. We and enact a bill here in an orderly manner. I am for the object of the bill, but I am not for enacting into a permanent code the temporary acts passed for the census of 1900 without having the provisions of the temporary laws that we are to perpetuate before provisions of the temporary laws that we are to perpetuate before us. I do not believe that it is just to either side of the House to expect the passage of this bill in this crude shape. Some of our friends on both sides of this Chamber seem to think it necessary that we accept this bill with all of its indefiniteness in order to secure our employees in the public service. Rather than do so I should let mine go back home and remain there. This bill can be quickly re-formed, the civil-service safeguard thrown around the employees, and the same objects secured on safe premises.

ought to read every provision under the five-minute rule. We ought to amend them where wrong, approve them where right,

Let us have this bill come in here for a permanent census; let the provisions in the bill that makes it permanent fix the salaries for every permanent officer, fix his duties; let it have every essential feature for establishing and managing a permanent bureau. That is all any of us want. When that bill comes, enough of us will be for it to make its passage secure; then we will have an analysis hill be bill be bill be belowed. orderly bill which will be consistent in all of its provisions, with a range of salaries in harmony with other permanent departments. It is expecting almost too much of the members of this House for the committee to run in a blind bill here that nobody knows the provisions of, that nobody has an opportunity to amend, and nobody can have the right to discuss under the five-minute rule.

nobody can have the right to discuss under the five-minute rule.

I am for the bill when properly framed.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMs].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, like the gentleman who has just taken his seat, I am committed to the proposition to make permanent the Census Bureau. It gives the power to a permanent Bureau to do the work that is now being done by the present Census Bureau. But I wish to state that I have never seen the bill until this morning, and it seems to me exceedingly unfortunate in some respects, and especially in the matter to which I wish to call the attention of the committee. After providing that this Census Bureau shall be made a permanent Bureau of the Government, the bill goes on:

And all provisions of said act and acts amendatory thereof not inconsist-ent with this act are hereby continued in force.

Mr. Chairman, unfortunately the committee in introducing the bill have not even made that act to which reference is made a part of their report for our information. The law referred to was part of their report for our information. The law referred to was enacted solely and purposely as a temporary measure and may as a temporary measure be just as perfect as human legislation and human judgment could make it for the purpose then contemplated. But it is now sought to make that legislation permanent. We have not that statute before us, and hence I can not consistently vote for something the provisions of which I do not understand. I think, certainly, that the committee should have made legislation to which they refer a part of their report for our information and guidance. and guidance.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, that act, as I understand it, provides—and I am trusting solely to memory in this regard—that the civil-service law should not apply. Now, if that act is continued in force in so far as its provisions are not inconsistent with the act before us, those provisions would apply, and the President would not have the right to overrule the plain provisions of the statute. Therefore I shall offer this amendment when the proper time comes:

Amend by a ting after the word "force," in line 9, the following:

"The Census Office as now constituted and the employees therein are hereby included in the classified civil service of the United States, the same as though included therein by order of the President, and such employees shall have the same rights and enjoy the same privileges of transfer and otherwise as other employees of the Government now included in the classified service under the provisions of the civil-service act."

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me a question?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Yes.
Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. What is the gentleman's understanding as to the length of time that these employees will be on the eligible list? As I understand the civil-service rules, they can not be on the eligible list for a period longer than a year.
Mr. SIMS. My object in offering this amendment is that they have been appropriately after the passage of the act to may be transferred immediately after the passage of the act to any other Department without any further examination.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. But what length of time does the gentleman understand that they would be, under the civil-Mr. SIMS. My amendment does not put them on the eligible list; it puts them on the classified list.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Then the gentleman does not put them on the eligible list. Mr. SIMS. The object of the provision is not to place them merely on the eligible list, but transfer them into the service, so that they may be transferred without reappointment.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. And so they would be indefinitely in continual service?

Mr. SIMS. The same as other employees of the Government are, but no further. Unless this bill is amended so as to embrace this provision I shall offer the above amendment when the bill is read for amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, I rise for a question of information. Will the Chair inform the House under what rule the time is being apportioned?

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. FLEMING. And is there any one representing the other

Mr. HOPKINS. It has all been on the other side up to date. [Laughter.

Mr. FLEMING. I heard the gentleman from Illinois this morning, and I thought he was in favor of the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman had listened to the remarks this morning he would have observed that the most of them were on the other side. Mr. FLEMING. And I think the longer this runs the more you will hear on that side. [Laughter.] I want a little time myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is entitled to recognition, or any other gentleman who addresses the Chair.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have no criticism to make upon the admirable work, only to commend, that has been done by the Census Bureau for the Twelfth Census. I know the Commissioner personally, and I know his official work. His work deserves the commendation of this House. With almost absolute power in the selection of his subordinate force, in the expenditure of the power in the selection of his subordinate force, in the expenditure of the amount of money already expended, thirteen and one-half millions, and coming before your Committee on Appropriations for the next fiscal year for an additional sum of $1,900,000 for the conduct of his office up to June 30, 1903—when the Census Bureau administration, covering upward of fifteen millions, passes the criticisms of the people and the Congress, with neither condemnation nor reflection of any character, I can truly say, that Governor Merriam and his subordinate force deserve the commendation for great work well done and the confidence of this House. [Appleage 1]

House. [Applause.]

As to the civil-service phase of this proposed legislation as just stated by the gentleman in charge of the bill, upon the submisstated by the gentleman in charge of the bill, upon the submission of the terms of the present law to provide for the taking of the Twelfth Census to the Civil Service Commission, it was determined that the power did not rest in the President, under the civil-service law, to blanket this force into the civil service. I have this to say, however, that when it is possible for the President, under the civil-service law, to blanket thousands of men in the rural free-delivery service to the civil service, when the statute for that service reads, "For experimental rural free-delivery, including carriers, etc," and this statute, March 3, 1899, reads, "That nothing herein contained shall be construed to establish a census bureau permanent beyond the Twelfth Census," I can not understand the distinction made by the Civil Service Bureau. One service is "experimental" and it goes into civil service; the other is not "permanent" and it can not be classified. The rural free delivery is under the Post-Office Department, and the Census Bureau is under the Department of the Interior.

What the chairman of the Civil Service Committee of the

What the chairman of the Civil Service Committee of the House may determine, when it makes an inroad on the civil-service law passed in 1883, with no amendment from that date to this—what he may say, representing his committee, I do not know. But I for one am in favor of such a revision of this proposed legislation that it will transfer this tried and experienced force.

as far as possible into the civil service; but at the same time I do not believe that even this force should have a longer tenure or a longer time to enter under the civil service than the men who to-day are passing examinations all over the country, and so standing as to be placed upon the eligible list. I think they all should stand on the same level and should come in fair competition of the result of the same level and should come in fair competition. tion, after you care for those who are now in the Census Office so far as the Government necessities and work require.

After that they should have no precedence over persons on the eligible list or any others who may come later, after examination. The moment the civil-service law operates that moment, under that law, the appointments must be apportioned, as they are to-day in all the Government departments in Washington, "in accordance with the population of the respective States."

Let me state what I claim with reference to this legislation. The declaration of the law—existing law—is mandatory:

SEC. 4. That there shall also be in the Census Office

Observe the language-"shall be"- to be appointed by the Director thereof in the manner herein specified.

Then it goes on to enumerate a large number of offices—perhaps 100 or more offices. I submit that unless by some specific provision of the proposed legislation this class of officers shall be excluded from those to be appointed by the Director of the Census this law will run above and in contravention of your civil-service law. There must be an amendment to this bill to transfer this great force to the civil service by specific provision, for the reason that the Civil Service Commission to-day says they can not be transferred under the existing law, and every provision of the act of March 3, 1899, relating to this subject is reenacted in this bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BINGHAM. I would like to occupy some further time. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can be recognized in his own right. Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. BINGHAM. I claim that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, the present census law will execute itself under the appropriations for the current year and under the appropriations submitted to the Committee on Appropriations with all the committee on appropriations.

under the appropriations submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, which will be a part of the sundry civil appropriation bill, aggregating $1,900,000.

Under the present law the four leading features of the Twelfth Census must be completed by the last day of June, 1902. The Superintendent of the Census in his report makes the statement that he will be able to submit the report upon those four leading features provided for by the law, relating to population, to mortality, to the products of agriculture, and of manufacturing and mechanical establishments, by the last day of June, 1902.

Section 8 of the present law reads as follows, if the House will give attention:

give attention:

give attention:

That after the completion and return of the enumeration and of the work upon the schedules relating to the products of agriculture and to manufacturing and mechanical establishments provided for in section 7 of this act, the Director of the Census is hereby authorized to collect statistics relating to special classes, including the insane, feeble-minded, deaf, dumb, and blind; to crime, pauperism, and benevolence, including prisoners, paupers, juvenile delinquents, and inmates of benevolent and reformatory institutions; to deaths and births in registration areas; to social statistics of cities; to public indebtedness, valuation, taxation, and expenditures; to religious bodies; to electric light and power, telephone and telegraph business; to transportation by water, express business, and street railways; to mines, mining, and minerals, and the production and value thereof, including gold, in divisions of placer and vein, and silver mines, and the number of men employed, the average daily wage, average working time, and aggregate earnings in the various branches and aforesaid divisions of the mining industry? Provided, That the reports herein authorized relating to mines, mining, and minerals shall be published on or before July 1, A. D. 1908.

If this bill should become a permanent law in the form in which

If this bill should become a permanent law in the form in which it is presented, I am not certain that it will not repeal the provision of existing law requiring the reports I have indicated upon those four leading features. I may be wrong in my view on this subject. The gentleman can correct me if I am. But in my judgment the bill, becoming permanent law, will take in in the future all the subjects named. These would be of course the basis of the formation of a newly organized bureau. I do not think, however, that this is the way to arrive at the formation of the permanent Census Bureau.

Some four or five years ago I introduced a bill drafted by Mr. Wright, the chief of the Bureau of Labor, who, by law October 3, 1893, and up to the organization of the present Census Bureau, had the control of the finishing or completing of the Eleventh Census. In the bill drafted by Mr. Wright he submitted in detail all that was necessary for the establishment of a permanent bureau. The legislation was never considered by the House. He stated in his testimony before the Committee on Appropriations that the census work traversed very largely the work of his bureau and of the statistical departments of the Government.

He was certainly familiar with this subject, for the simple rea-

He was certainly familiar with this subject, for the simple reason that he had under his charge all matters pertaining to the closing out of the Eleventh Census from 1893 up to the organization of the present Bureau. I submit that this bill should be recommitted in order that the committee may define exactly what are to be the features or the scope of the work of this newly organized Bureau. I want its work to continue so it may give us the reports which it is provided shall be made on the 30th of June, 1903, and the 30th of June, 1903.

It seems to me most important that this should be done. Elebo

It seems to me most important that this should be done. Elaborate the basis of a new bureau at some later date. Mr. Garfield during his career in Congress always contended for the specification or details in the organization of every new bureau and all the departments of the Government where appropriations were to be made for subordinate force. When we established by statute the Bureau of Labor, we defined in so many words what that Bureau should do. The only definition as to what this newly organized Census Bureau shall do after June 30, 1903, is contained in section 8 of the existing law.

There is no question that the country wants a continuation of the Census Bureau, or some bureau where necessary statistical information can be obtained to aid in consummating wise and intelligent legislation. If we establish it on a permanent basis, there is no doubt that a vast amount of work now being done by other branches of the Government will wisely and economically be transferred to this Bureau. You may call the Bureau what you choose; but there will and should be a condensation, a crystallization in some bureau of statistical work now being done at large expense, and in some cases duplicated, by other departments of the Government.

As to the matter of compensation of the Director of the Census or of the subordinate force, I care but little. I think they should receive in the future that which they now receive. The House has determined time and again to change the compensation of heads of bureaus. A couple of years ago we increased the salary of the Librarian of Congress from $5,000 to $6,000 a year. We have done the same thing time and again with respect to the heads of various bureaus. Your Committee on Appropriations has been continually importuned for such increases of compensation and the same pressure will continue.

The bill should be recommitted to the committee, with instructions to report back to the House, as submitted by the gentleman from Nebraska

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask unanimous consent that all general debate may be closed at 3 o'clock, so that these various propositions suggested by different gentlemen may be taken up and disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed at 3 o'clock.

Mr. ELEMING. I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed at 3 o'clock.

Mr. FLEMING. I object.
Mr. HOPKINS. Do not object. You can have such time as

Mr. FLEMING. There are two or three other gentlemen who want to talk.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all general debate be closed in fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed in fifteen minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I object.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I should like five or ten minutes.

Mr. FLEMING. And I want ten.
Mr. HOPKINS. Well, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all general debate, then, be closed in twenty-five minutes—ten minutes to be occupied by the gentleman from Georgia, ten minutes by the gentleman from Mississippi, and that I be permitted to have five minutes to close the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed in twenty-five minutes, five minutes of which shall be occupied by himself, ten minutes by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] and ten minutes by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I object. I have already been

Mr. HOPKINS. I make it thirty minutes then, and I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] five.

Mr. SULZER. I want two minutes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Make it thirty-five minutes and give the gentleman from New York five.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire five minutes. Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman can take his five minutes under

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman can take his five minutes under the five-minute rule. There are a number of amendments, and I want to get through with the bill to-day, and if the gentleman wants only five minutes he can take it under the five-minute rule. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] modifies his proposition by making the time for the closing of general debate thirty-five minutes, and in addition to the division already suggested, suggests that five minutes be occupied by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] and five minutes by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it is notoriously dangerous to attack a bear defending her youing but I suspect that is safe and easy and hopeful compared with the task of attacking the wish of members of this House to protect their young dependents in the Census Department.

Young dependents in the Census Department.

I do not pretend to be any more unselfish or any less fond of patronage than other members of the House, but in view of the obvious purpose and intention to amend this bill so that all persons now employed in the Census Department shall be covered into the civil service, I feel that it is the duty of the chairman of the committee on that subject, at least, to be sure some of the objections against that process are stated to the House.

It has been suggested as one argument that these employees are remarkably efficient. That is doubtless true, but is it not true that they are efficient because they are new employees, because there are barnacles, as the gentleman from Michigan says, among the old employees? And these barnacles are largely relics of the old patronage system, appointed before there were civil-service examinations and kept there by political influence. This Census Bureau, though not put under civil-service rules, still is evidence that there is some growth in the direction of a proper civil service. In the past the rule was, "To the victors belong the spoils." Now the rule seems to be, "To Congress belong the spoils." Now the rule seems to be, To congest the spoils."

The Republican party was in power, and according to the old rule we were entitled to all the spoils. But I understand that the rule was adopted by the chief of the census that the spoils should be divided twenthirds to Republican members of Congress and be divided, two-thirds to Republican members of Congress and one-third to Democratic members of Congress, about the proportion in which the membership was divided. To the victors belong now only two-thirds of the spoils, and consequently the clerks in this census bureau have been divided, two-thirds to us and one-third to you and every man on this floor in retire agent. to you, and every man on this floor, in voting upon this proposi-tion, is voting for his clerk and his patronage, and we all know it and the country knows it. The question is, should we not be a little careful to see that we vote fairly and that we do not impeach the civil-service rule, which is now the settled practice of this country?

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Hemenway] says that if 2,000 clerks are loafing here in Washington, looking for work, who are our clerks, we will have a motive to go to the Departments and have the incompetents put out and these clerks put in. I do not, myself, think that condition would be very pleasant for us. But the gentleman from Indiana knows, and we all know, that the reason these incompetents are kept in the Departments to-day is not because of the civil-service law, but because members of Congress go up there and prevent the heads of Departments from discharging those incompetent employees. The heads of from discharging those incompetent employees. The heads of the bureaus would rather have the best clerks, but they do not dare to discharge the clerks who we insist shall be kept; and they have testified that the more incompetent the clerk the more influence there is apt to be behind him and the more they are obliged to keep him. That is the reason why the incompetent men are there to-day

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.
Mr. HEMENWAY. If it was in the power of Congress to fill the places of the discharged clerks, would they not urge their discharge in place of their retention?
Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. They would urge the discharge of the clerk who had not any influence behind him. They are the clerks who would be discharged, as the gentleman very well knows, and not the incompetent clerk. It would not depend upon the merit of the clerk at all. But here are clerks who are our pets that we are legislating to keep in.

Mr. TONGUE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.
Mr. TONGUE. Does the gentleman think that if clerks were appointed for a term instead of for life that these incompetent men would be reappointed?
Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. That presents another question, which I have not time to discuss in ten minutes; but I recommend to the properties of the properties of the properties of the properties.

ognize it as one that has force in it and that at the proper time I shall be glad to discuss.

I do not say that the civil-service system is perfect; but the question is, Is it not better than the spoils system? If we are going to change it, is it not an unfortunate way and time to change it when we change it obviously and avowedly for the benefit of the personal appointees of the members of this House on both sides? În other words, we are voting simply to keep our protégés in

If we are going to vote for this amendment, we are going to put them on the eligible list and keep them there forever. That means them on the eligible list and keep them there forever. That means that they are the only ones to be appointed for many years. The present system, imperfect as it may be, has this in its favor—there is no influence back of it. Everybody in the whole country has an equal chance to get on that roll, and the classified service to-day is, in my opinion, inefficient only because the old men who were in there before examinations were required, with influence back of them, are kept there. I believe that if the old clerks who were appointed under the restrance existent water were surface. were appointed under the patronage system were put out we would have excellent clerks, just as we got them when the Director of the Census examined the clerks for his service. I admit they are undoubtedly, on the average, good clerks, though they were not all appointed as good clerks, Why, a member told me that he had nominated six men to the Director of the Census and from those six only one passed the examination.

Under the old system every one of those six, incompetent as they were, would have gone in. We have made some progress.

The necessity for an examination has come to be generally admitted; but I do not think it is fair, when under the other system everyone throughout the country has a chance of coming and passing an examination and getting on the rolls, that these 2,000 here, that have been nominated by us, our selfish appointees, who could only get in because they were our friends, alone should go on the rolls and take all the places.

Mr. BINGHAM. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, has not the Civil Service Commission allowed the rural free-him, has not the Civil Service Commission allowed the rural free-delivery clerks to be transferred?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I believe it has.

Mr. BINGHAM. Why, of course it has.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Of course, the President al-ways has been allowed to put the shield of the civil service over any existing department, and that has been done.

Mr. BINGHAM. To over 44,000.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. And that, Mr. Chairman, has been one of the vital and proper criticisms made on the syshas been one of the vital and proper criticisms made on the sys tem—that every President, Republican or Democrat, filled up the offices with his party followers while he was in office, and then before he went out blanketed them under the civil service to keep them there. I think that is one of the reasons, and a just reason, why the civil service has sometimes excited natural indignation; because we said it was not fair for the President to put his men in and then blanket them under the civil service to keep them in. Now we are doing just the same thing, although it is a little fairer, perhaps, because only two-thirds of them are Republicans and one-third Democrats. But the real way, the way I maintain that is fair, is that those who pass the best examination should go in. If we only had clerks who have passed an examination, if they were the only ones now in these Departments, I believe that our department service would be quite as good a service as the census service is to-day.

Mr. THAYER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. THAYER. If it be true that those clerks now in the Census Department have passed an examination equal to that which the civil service provides for the other Departments and are al-ready in the service, if they should turn them out and send them ready in the service, if they should turn them out and send them home, would it not be an infringement of the principles that apply to the civil service.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Why, of course it would not, Mr. Chairman, because they were appointed simply for that term, and were appointed by our political selection. On the contrary, the gentleman does not see my distinction, that we ought to allow a contract of the cont to allow everybody to have a chance to get into the civil service, whereas these men there now have got in by favor of us as individuals and members of Congress.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, when this matter first came up I was disposed, as I am now, to favor the general principles of the bill. It seems to me that when our Constitution requires that a census shall be taken every ten years we ought not to disrupt and disorganize the bureau that takes one census as soon as the and disorganize the bureau that takes one census as soon as the work is done without profiting by its experience.

I believe it is entirely proper that we should establish a permanent census bureau, and I believe it is very easy for the committee, with that single object in view, to frame a proper bill to carry out that purpose; but I do not believe that this bill is a proper one, and I think it ought to be sent back to the committee from which it came with the direction to bring before this House detailed precife statement of all the officers peeded in the Bureau detailed precife statement of all the officers peeded in the Bureau detailed. reau, of the general nature of the work the Bureau is to do, and all the salaries to be paid to the employees.

The bill which the committee seek to-day to enact into permaners.

nent law was specifically intended for a temporary purpose. The salaries were adjusted accordingly, the number of its employees was adjusted accordingly for the rush work, and it would be imwas adjusted accordingly for the rush work, and it would be impossible, it would be almost inconceivable, that a bill planned for such a purpose could by any possibility be the best basis of a bill for the permanent establishment of a census bureau. For instance, here are the salaries of $7,500, more than the chief of that Bureau ought to be paid when you compare his work with the work of other departments of the Government, except during the time when he has a census directly under his charge and a large number of clerks under his direction.

The salaries paid the chief and assistants are beyond what they The salaries paid the chief and assistants are beyond what they ought to be for gentlemen who will have a great deal of leisure weighing upon their hands for a period of four or five years. Why should we pass a bill with our eyes blinded in this manner, without any details, without any special occasion, when it is so easy for the committee, headed by so able a gentleman as the chairman is known to be, to draft a proper bill under proper directions of the House as to what we want?

I inquired, Mr. Chairman, why it was that so abnormal a proposition, so illogical a proposition, should be made to the House of Representatives, and the best answer I could get was that if we were to go into details in that way and specify we should find that we were trespassing upon the territory of some other departments of the Government, and they would fight the measure.

Well, why do you want to trespass upon the territory of other departments of the Government if they are properly discharging their duties? The answer I received to that criticism was, "Why, we will abolish some of the other bureaus when we get this one or the blood."

My answer is to put the abolishment of the other bureaus in your bill now and let us know what you are going to do. Do not put this bureau upon the Government with any indefinite promise that you are going to cut down expenses somewhere else by lopping off some other bureau. Who ever heard of a Government bureau being abolished or lopped off except by substituting another? If you are going to cut off any bureau, now is your time. If you believe that the statisticians of any Department are doing work that should be done by the Census Bureau, bring in your bill to cut them out. If you believe that statisticians in the Treasury, or in any other department, are doing work that ought to be done by the Census Bureau, specify it in the bill and cut off the unnecessary work.

But, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me a most unheard-of proposi-It seems to me to argue the greatest confidence in the ability of that committee, or the indifference of the members of the House, that a bill of this kind should seriously be presented to us for acceptance, to be swallowed whole with our eyes shut. For one, Mr. Chairman, I can not and will not vote for it, notwithstanding the fact that I believe the present Director of the Census is one of the ablest men that has ever been placed in charge of that Department. I think he has done a splendid work. He has done it with consummate executive ability, and I think no better man could have been selected.

I have no complaint to make against him or any member of the Bureau, but I am opposed to this bill and the principles upon which it is based. When the original census bill was passed a great deal was said about its being nonpartisan. I have no doubt that Director Merriam used all the backbone he possessed, and perhaps had to borrow some, to make the few appointments he did make in favor of the Democrats. But I want to state the fact here that Democrats have not been given their proportionate share of the patronage at all. The gentleman from Massachusetts says that the Republicans had two-thirds and the Democrats had onethird. I am quite sure the gentleman is mistaken. I do not know how much. My understanding is that each Democratic Congress-man has been allowed to name two persons for appointment, subject to examination.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I was allowed four.

Mr. FLEMING. Well, you got less than a great many of your colleagues on the Republican side.
Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. And you got less than a great many on your side.

Mr. FLEMING. I think perhaps that some Democratic members holding advantageous positions on committees may have gotten more. I inquired around among my colleagues and I found that the average was about two to each member, making about three hundred of these appointees who could be credited to the Democratic membership of the House, and yet there were 3,400 employees at one time in that Bureau. Where did all the other appointees come from?

Mr. Chairman, I have been informed—I do not know how true it is—that one Republican member from a border State which sometimes goes Democratic and sometimes Republican has credited to him in the Census Bureau 62 appointees

Mr. HOPKINS. I am prepared to deny that statement. Mr. FLEMING. Well, I will not affirm it to be true. I was simply quoting information given me to-day.

Mr. HOPKINS. I undertake to say that the Director of the Census has dealt fairly and equitably by everybody in this matter, and that no member of the House or the Senate has, in my judgment, controlled a third of the number of appointments that the gentleman names.

Mr. FLEMING. Would it be an impertment question if I should ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. Hopkins] to tell us how many the Director of the Census permitted him to name?
Mr. HOPKINS. Seven.

That is a little more than the gentleman from Mr. FLEMING.

Massachusetts got.
Mr. TONGUE. Do I understand that the gentleman from

Mr. TONGUE. Do I understand that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Fleming] got two employees appointed on what is called the permanent roll of the Census Bureau?

Mr. FLEMING. I was allowed to name two appointees; and they were such competent clerks that they are both in office there to-day.

Mr. TONGUE. The gentleman was allowed to name just as many as I was.

Mr. FLEMING. I am quite sure those two are going to remain

by reason of their merits.

Mr. Chairman, I have no sympathy whatever with the amendment that has been offered, and with the discussion that has been indulged in here, looking to breaking down or making a breach in the civil-service law so as to allow all these Census employees to be carried bodily over into the eligible list of the civil service. For one I am in favor of the civil-service law. One of the first speeches I made after coming to Congress was in support of the civil service. I stand in the same position to-day, and I believe that in taking this position I am doing the best for my constit-uents in my own State and district and the best for the people of the country. I am in favor of the civil service, and therefore, if this bill is intended to make a breach in it, that would be an additional reason why I should vote against it.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, the establishment of a permanent census office has been talked about for more than twenty years. It has been recommended by officials of the Government over and over again, and those who have given the subject careful study have continuously urged it as most desirable, and in fact the Census Bureau is to be of real and lasting value.

The very worst form of the present system is the temporary nature of the service. I am in favor of making the Bureau permanent.

The conversion of the Census Office into a permanent bureau would further the retention of the most capable and efficient members of the force as a skeleton organization and a nucleus for future operations. Under the system, or lack of system, which has prevailed hitherto, the entire force is disbanded and scattered once in every ten years and can never be brought together again. cach new census is taken by new men, who are, for the most part, devoid of the careful experience and training which is absolutely necessary for the census work. As has been well said, only a permanent bureau can possibly obtain a trained force of expert statisticians. As a practical question, it may well be considered whether it will be possible, with the perpetual increase of population of the country, and with its acquisitions in the way of territory not immediately contiguous to our own, to properly enumerate the people and gather such information as has been cus-merate the people and gather such information as has been customary, and do the work in a satisfactory manner.

It is not unlikely that there will be 100,000,000 people to count in the year 1910, some of them in distant lands; and to attempt to properly organize an office to do this tremendous work and finish it within a reasonable time with an entirely untrained force and with only a four months in which to work and some and the same of the same with only a few months in which to make preparation is well-nigh beyond the bounds of possibility. While, on the other hand, if the Director in charge can have a well-trained force and ample time in which to make preparation, it is believed that the four principal reports, namely, population, vital statistics, agriculture, and manufactures, can be given to the public within eighteen months after the commencement of the enumeration. Such a result would not be possible unless men could be obtained and kept within the Bureau who thoroughly understand the work laid out for them to do. It must be borne in mind also that the office has acquired a large amount of valuable property, including a modern printing outfit, as well as furniture and fixtures, valued at over $100,000, all of which are useful and desirable and will be available for years to come, and which would all be destroyed and lost in the event of a discontinuance of the present organization.

While it is undoubtedly true that for at least two or three years the Government would be put to the expense of maintaining an office force of 150 or 200 people, the cost would in any event be but a slight one when compared with the enormous saving which would be made when the time is reached for the beginning of the decennial enumeration. Much of the work ordered by Congress has never been undertaken before, involving considerable loss to the Government from the want of experience on the part of those who have had charge of certain inquiries. It is believed that many hundreds of thousands of dollars can be saved by retaining the experienced statisticians and clerks in this office from one decade to the next.

In my judgment the field of operation of the Census Office is so broad and covers such a wide range of subjects that it is impossible to do them full justice with any organization possible under existing law. To accomplish the work now undertaken by the existing law. To accomplish the work how undertaken by the decennial census requires a force so large as to be unwieldy, and which it is impossible to form of proper material. Were the Bureau so organized that its work would be continuous, the force required would be comparatively small, and competent statisticians and specialists could be secured for the service. The amount of money needed to carry on such a continuous bureau, distributing its work through the ten-year periods, would be materially less than the amount which would be necessary to take the consumptor the present system, and that in addition the work of colunder the present system, and that, in addition, the work of collection and compilation of the returns would be more accurately and satisfactorily performed, and the results obtained would be of greater value.

Several attempts have been made to make the census a permanent bureau by the introduction of bills, but nothing came of them, and finally, in 1899, the present census act was passed. The present legislation was so prepared as to bear in mind the possibility of the permanency of the bureau, and certain reports, involving the principal topics of investigation with which the Census Office was charged, were ordered collated and printed within two years after the enumeration. Following the principal reports, the law allows the collection of certain data of a special character, involving the utilization of the office force for at least four or five years longer, so that, as a practical question, it will be necessary only for Congress to determine that the skeleton force necessary to prepare for the work of the Thirteenth Census, involving, perhaps, 200 clerks, will be all that is required in the way of expenditures to accomplish the desired purpose.

It is very desirable, it seems to me, to have the matter determined at this time, as the gradual disintegration of the force requisite for the emergency work of the office is about to take place and would likely involve the loss to the bureau of quite a number of people whose presence as experts will be necessary if the work of the office is to be continued until the time arrives for the taking of the next decennial census. The present work before the bureau is the completion of the four principal reports-population, vital statistics, agriculture, and manufacturing and mechanical inquiries—by the 1st of July, 1902, at which time it is expected the clerical force will be reduced to approximately 800 people. The special subjects required to be inquired into by the present act, so far as the same can be estimated at this time, will require a clerical force as follows:

From 1903 to 1904 From 1904 to 1905

At that time, unless the office is charged with new work not provided for in the act, the clerical force will likely be reduced to about 240 people, and between the years 1906 and 1908 will still further be reduced to about 200. Under the present act there are certain inquiries that will have to be made yearly in connection with deaths and births in registration areas which will require a continuous force during the balance of the decade. The other clerks will be utilized in making preparation for the census com-mencing in 1910, and for which at least three years should be permitted.

Mr. Chairman, in the Fifty-second Congress, second session, the Select Committee on the Eleventh Census of the House considered a House resolution instructing the committee to inquire into the expediency of establishing a permanent bureau, and submitted a voluminous report in favor of the establishment of such a bureau after having granted hearings to the Superintendent of the Census, a number of statisticians of the country, and the Commissioner of Labor. The committee stated that a series of hearings was held, at which testimony was given not only as to the general effect of the permanent establishment of the Census Office, but also as to the special effect to be produced on the collection of different branches of statistics, and then goes on to say:

ferent branches of statistics, and then goes on to say:

The testimony of these gentlemen was unanimously to the effect that the establishment of the Census Office on a permanent basis would not only secure greater accuracy both in the collection and compilation of census statistics, but would result in an absolute saving of money for the entire ten years. Very full testimony was given showing the reasons for arriving at these conclusions, and a complete description was given to the committee of the method of taking the census under the present system, from the preparation of the schedules to be used by the enumerators to the printing of the final volumes containing the results of the tabulations of the returns. It was shown that in all branches of census work, but especially in preparing for the important work of enumeration, great injury must necessarily result both as regards accuracy and economy from the hurried and hastily considered methods incident to a system where no sufficient time for careful and deliberate preparation could, in the nature of things, be afforded. Methods of obtaining information, which should only be finally adopted as the result of painstaking study and judicious experiment, must frequently be decided on a moment's notice and without any means of knowing whether they will be productive of successful results.

The Census Bureau is one of the most important in the Govern-

The Census Bureau is one of the most important in the Government. It ought to be made permanent. If it were made permanent. nent its service would be much better, its affairs more economically administered, and, I believe, the expense to the Government instead of being increased would be materially decreased in the end. For these reasons I shall support this bill, and I hope it will pass.

Now, another thing, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say, and that is in regard to the Director of the Census. I am not in sympathy with those who say his salary is too large. His salary is $7,500 a year, and that is not too much for efficient service by a trained, an experienced, and a competent man. In my judgment, the salaries of most of the Government officials are entirely inadequate.

The Government can afford to pay just compensation for honest, faithful, and industrious work. I would not take one dollar from the present salary of the Director. He has earned, and he will earn, every dollar he receives.

It is my candid opinion, and I am glad of this opportunity to say, that the present Director of the Census is entitled to the commendation of every citizen of this country for the practical, the businesslike, and the efficient work he has done in the administration of his office. This country has probably rever had. istration of his office. This country has probably never had a more competent man at the head of the affairs of the Census Bureau than Governor Merriam. His work has been stupendous, and performed in a most admirable manner. I stand here as a Democrat and gladly pay him this just tribute. We need his services, and he should be retained and the bureau made per-

It may be true, as some of my colleagues declare, that this is not a perfect bill. Few bills are, and I doubt not this bill could be improved. But it seems to me this is begging the question. This bill simply provides for the permanency of the bureau and leaves all its details and future regulations to Congress. leaves all its details and ruture regulations to Congress. The permanency of the Census Office is the only question now before the House, it seems to me; and as I am in favor of making the Census Bureau permanent, I shall vote for this bill and trust to subsequent legislation to provide for its regulation and remedy its defects, if any there may be.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I was surprised at the closing statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Chairman, I was be said the great in before the committee provides.]

Sulzer] when he said the question before the committee now is not whether this is a good bill or a perfect bill, but that the question is whether we shall have a permanent census bureau. I apprehend the gentleman will not permit such a statement as that to go into the Record. I am in favor of a permanent bureau; but if we can have it by the passage of a good bill instead of a bad one, then let us have it by a good bill, and not by the one before the House. I had no intention of opposing this bill until I heard the discussion of it. It seems to me that if members will reflect but a moment that well as well as well as the second of the reflect but a moment they will see we can not afford to pass such a bill as this and put it upon the statute book.

The law authorizing the Twelfth Census was for a temporary purpose, and as well stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Bingham] almost absolute power was given to the Director; but here is a bill to make it a permanent law, and I say the committee ought to bring in a bill that to some extent, at least, defines the duties of the officers created in the bill. Why, outside of the enacting clause there is scarcely enough to amend. Suppose you wanted to amend some section of the census law now in force. Where would you amend it? To what would you attach your amendment? I say this bill ought to be recommitted, sent back to the committee, and the committee instructed to bring in a bill creating a permanent bureau and defining its duties, as far as possible. I have the kindest regard for the Director of the Census. I have no complaint to make against him. He has treated me courteously; but I speak against this bill because I believe it ought not to pass, and it would not pass if the members of this House could vote with that independent judgment which they ought to exercise on questions of this kind. But the power of patronage is fast destroying the independent action of Congress in both branches.

I want to say-and I know of no better time or place to say it to Democrats than now—that in my judgment there is no more serious or active influence against the success of Democracy to-day than the power of patronage used by the Administration upon Democrats holding prominent places on important committees in both Houses of Congress to quiet their opposition or court their support.

It is used to make them cowards when they ought to be active leaders against bad policies and vicious legislation, and there is no better time to set a good example to these gentlemen than here and now by voting your own independent judgment upon this question. Refer it back to the committee and let them bring in and whether any other bureau is opposing the bill or question. Refer it back to the committee and let them bring in a good bill, and whether any other bureau is opposing the bill or not it will receive the support of a good majority of this House. But it seems to me that the bill in its present form is very forcibly illustrated by a story about an epitaph on the tombstone of a man who was not considered the best in all respects. It read as follows:

In some respects this was a very bad man, while in others he was a blamed sight worse.

That is the condition of this bill. [Laughter.]
Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I think thirty minutes have

The CHAIRMAN. Only five minutes remain.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman intend to close the debate now?

Mr. HODELYG

Mr. HOPKINS. It has been closed by previous order, so far as the general debate is concerned, and in five minutes the bill will be taken up under the five-minute rule.

Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the members of the committee during the brief time I shall occupy in closing the debate. I shall endeavor to meet some of the objections that have

I can not in detail answer the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Fleming] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gillett], who advocate the civil-service rules. It is enough for me to say to the members of this House that if this bill becomes a law it puts the employees of the Census Bureau in a position where the President can extend the law over them, and, as was so clearly explained by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], then the power of transferring them to other Departments will So that if this bill becomes a law as it is reported by the committee it will enable these trained clerks to be utilized by the Government in all the other Departments.

But, Mr. Chairman, I do not base my support of this bill upon that clause. I base it upon this idea, that we are desirous of creating a great scientific statistical bureau that shall be permanent for the benefit of the people of this country. The United States was the pioneer Government of the world in establishing great statistical bureaus. Up to 1800 none of the great Governments of Europe had any such bureau as this for the purpose of taking at stated intervals a census of population, manufactures, and other great interests that make the great countries of the world what they are. To-day there is not a civilized government but what has a permanent bureau of the character that we seek to establish here to-day. There is not a country that has not pre-ceded the Government of the United States in making this most important bureau of all a permanent bureau of the government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what are the objections? The objections seem to be that this is incomplete in itself. I undertake to say, Mr. Chairman, that if this bill becomes a law it will provide for the taking of a census of the population, of manufactures, and of agriculture every ten years, the same as the existing law provided for the taking of the Twelfth Census. If gentlemen will refer to section 1 of the act, it provides as follows:

That a census of the population, of deaths, and of the manufacturing, mechanical, and agricultural products of the United States shall be taken for the year 1900 and every ten years thereafter.

If this Bureau becomes permanent, then every ten years provision is made for this work. The second section provides the machinery for carrying this out.

Now, the second objection is in regard to salaries. I undertake to say that aside from the salary of the Director there is not a person provided for in the bill whose salary is greater than for like service in any other Department of the Government. There are five great divisions, headed by an expert statistician, and the colored at $2,000 per greater than for like service in the salary is fixed at $3,000, no greater than for like service in the Treasury Department, in the Navy Department, in the Interior Department, or any other great Department of the Government. Why, Mr. Chairman, the Director of the Census found it almost impossible to get men who were willing to sacrifice their interests in civil occupations and take one of these positions as statistician because of the meager salary. But if it is made permanent these men can be secured, because they will know that while they get less per annum than they could get in private occupation that the employment is of a permanent character, and that is one reason why this bill should be enacted into law.

Any man who has looked over the expenditures of the Eleventh Any man who has looked over the expenditures of the Eleventh Census and has seen the millions of money sacrificed there will appreciate the importance of making this Bureau permanent. Under that census, Mr. Chairman, a large array of figures were collected relating to a vast number of subjects that required an expenditure of more than $3,000,000. They were never tabulated and used by the Government of the United States because of the inefficiency of the work and because it was delayed, some of it five years, some six, some seven, and some as late as nine years. Now, if the bill becomes law, under section 8 these various subjects, aside from population and other subjects that come under the census report proper, can be extended over five or six years. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. HOPKINS. I ask unanimous consent that I have five min-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOPKINS. The bill provides, then, that these statistics taken in this manner shall be tabulated in the Census Office and given to the public while the figures are fresh and can be of some use to the scientific men of the country, to statisticians, to man-ufacturers, and to all classes of our common country.

Now, again, if this bill becomes a law it is proposed later on to provide by legislation so as to take annual statistics regarding the production of cotton, wheat, and other agricultural products. This alone in one year for the farmers and planters of this country will be worth a thousandfold the expenditure of the Government. ment. This alone ought to be sufficient to commend itself to every man North and South, East and West.

Again, Mr. Chairman, they say that the salary of the Director Again, Mr. Chairman, they say that the salary of the Director is too large. When this bill was originally offered it contained a provision for the salary of the Director of the Census at $6,000 only. The Fifty-sixth Congress, after listening to the kind and character of work that was performed by the Director of the Census, almost by a unanimous vote increased that salary to $7,500. Mr. Chairman, the work that has already been laid out covers more than five years to come, so that the Director of the Census will be required to exercise all his great executive and scientific ability in the discharge of the duty that is already provided him. If the time ever comes when his service to his country is not worth what it is to-day, then let that Congress cut down that salary; but until that time comes permit the salary to remain as it is now

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman permit one suggestion? Can a man of like ability for a like office be had for that amount of money?

Mr. HOPKINS. Why, Mr. Chairman, the ability that is necessary for the management of that great Bureau, with the transaction of that great work for the benefit of the people of this country as exhibited already, would command a salary three times as large in any private occupation. I am surprised that the gentleman from Nebraska should hinge the great part of his argument upon the local that the Director of the Course has received a larger salary. fact that the Director of the Census has received a larger salary than some other person. He is receiving a larger salary because the duties performed by him are greater, because they are more minute and of more practical interest to the people of this country than any other bureau can possibly be to the people of this country.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I understood the gentleman to say that if this bill should pass there would be annual statistics of the wheat and corn crops taken every year. Is that correct; is there any provision of that kind?

Mr. HOPKINS. I stated, Mr. Chairman, that it was the design that if we could establish this permanent bureau to enhance the efficiency of it by legislation of that kind, but to do that

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. That is a design that is not in the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. I can not be interrupted further at this time. We can not in one bill meet all the exigencies; we may do it by amendment, precisely as we amend the bills which have established every census. We can only reach perfection by gradual stages and by experience, and before the completion of the work now laid out the Government of the United States, through Congress, can, by amendment, provide for the annual taking of these statistics regarding the cotton, wheat, and other agricultural products, and can also provide that manufactures shall be taken every five years instead of ten years, as now provided for in the bill; but we can not perfect it by one bill. The first step is to make this legislation permanent, and then when the time comes that an amendment will improve the law let it be improved by that amendment, and not undertake, as some gentleman has said, to make a bill here that would meet all the requirements of all the carping critics that can be brought together in this House from every State in the Union. It is enough for us to know that this bill, if it becomes a law, will be for the best interests of the country and benefit the scientific and statistical thought of the country as well. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Census Office created by an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1899, be, and the same hereby is, made a permanent bureau of the Government; and all provisions of said act and acts amendatory thereof not inconsistent with this act are hereby continued in force.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following motion, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

I move that the bill be reported to the House with the following recom-

I move that the online reported to the House with the following recommendation, namely:

"That the bill (H. R. 198) creating a permanent census be recommitted to the Select Committee on the Census, with instructions to prepare and report back as a substitute therefor a bill providing for a detailed organization of a permanent census bureau and with a provision therein to place the present employees within the classified service."

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. This motion would be in order only after all amendments have been disposed of. Unless objection is made, it may remain pending until the bill is amended.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That persons now employed in the Census Office shall be eligible to appointments within the classified service, without examination or certification by the Civil Service Commission, on the approval of the head of any Department.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment so that the clerks now employed in the Census Office will be eligible to be transferred to any other Department of the Government. I do it because I believe the Government will get the service of men that will be of value, men who have had experience, and that these will be better clerks than clerks that come from the ordinary civil-service examinations.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Indiana. In his amendment he says "all employees." Would it not be well to limit it to those who have taken the special examination?

Mr. HEMENWAY. As I understand it, there are no employees who did not take the special examination.

Mr. BELL. Oh, yes; there are janitors and laborers.
Mr. HEMENWAY. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will accept the suggestion, and I will add to my amendment "not to include janitors" janitors

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment may be modified to that extent.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say further in regard to this that the employees there now are distributed between the different States, so that there can be no objection for that reason to the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana to his own amendment is objectionable, because if it becomes a law people who are now eligible as laborers and and charwomen in the Census Office would not be eligible for future appointment in any other Department of the Government, while they are now eligible because the places are not in the classified list. The amendment which the gentleman from Indiana proposes does not only make the employees eligible by transfer now, but as long as they may be alive. It takes 3,000 persons now in the employ of the Government, a majority of whom may pass out into civil life at any time, and during their lives they will be eligible for appointment in the Government service without regard to the civil-service law or any eligible list which may exist

I submit that that is unfair discrimination in their favor. quite agree with the gentleman from Indiana that the clerks and employees of the Census Office who have shown their efficiency so thoroughly as they have ought to be eligible for transfer to the other Departments.

But there ought to be some limit of time fixed upon that. amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana makes them aniendment onered by the gentleman from Indiana makes them eligible for appointment, without limiting the time, whenever the head of any Department, under political pressure or otherwise, shall make the recommendation. That is a preference which I do not think the gentleman himself wishes to confer upon them.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That from and after the passage of this act all the provisions of the civil-service law shall apply to the selection and appointment of all employees thereafter to be employed in said bureau.

of all employees thereafter to be employed in said bureau.

Mr. HOPKINS. I make a point of order upon that amendment. It is not germane to the purpose of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois on the point of order.

Mr. HOPKINS. The only object of this bill is to make what is now a temporary bureau permanent. This amendment relates to an entirely different subject. I insist on my point of order.

Mr. FLEMING. Then I make a point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY].

Mr. HEMENWAY. The point of order comes too late.

Mr. FLEMING. I do not think so.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] is now under consideration by the Committee of the Whole, and it is too late to interpose any point of order against it. of order against it.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] offers an amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, and it would appear to the Chair very clear that, the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana being now before the committee, the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee is now in order.

the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee is now in order. It is an amendment clearly germane to the pending amendment. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I approach the discussion of this question with a spirit friendly to the general purpose of this bill. There are many reasons that occur to me, though I shall not take time to enumerate them, why it would be wise to have a permanent census bureau. At the same time I am impressed with the fact that many reasons suggest themselves, or have been suggested here, why the bill in its present form should not be adopted. It should be referred back to the committee for amendment and report. The effect of this proposed legislation—its sole and only effect—is to strike out of existing statutes the word "temporary" and insert the word "permanent." In this way we have temporary legislation made permanent without an opporanity for this House to consider the details and the scope of the canity for this House to consider the details and the scope of the legislation which we are to make permanent.

One of the provisions of the existing law was that the civil-service regulations should not apply to appointees in this Bureau. That is a positive, affirmative provision. The Civil Service Commission and the civil-service legislation are the creatures of Congress. Congress has the power to determine to what particular branches or bureaus of the Government the civil-service law shall apply and to what it shall not apply. Then we have here an express declaration that it shall not apply to this Bureau proposed to be created. The effect of this will be to leave this Bureau free from the provisions of the civil-service law and allow appointments to be made there and the appointees subsequently appointments to be made there and the appointees subsequently transferred to any of the other departments. Thus the effect will be that political or other methods of appointment, which do not comply with the civil-service regulations, may be made in this Bureau and the appointees immediately transferred to other departments. It will simply open a door which will destroy the effectiveness and the usefulness of the civil service in its practical application to all the other departments of the Government.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman aware that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Hemenway] in offering his amendment changed the wording of the original proposition and made it read "all such employees now in the Census Office," so as to exclude the operation of the objection which the gentleman from Tennessee so properly raises?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; it says "all employees now in the Census Office;" but it does not say those that may be employed there hereafter. This is to be a permanent bureau, and the amendment that I offer is intended to provide that all persons who may be employed in the future shall be subject to the province of the ciril agriculture and the statement of the circles agriculture and the circles agriculture and the circles agriculture who may be employed in the litture shall be student to the provisions of the civil-service law, as well as those now employed there who may be eligible to transfer. The law of 1899 provides that the Census Bureau may appoint its employees regardless of the civil-service law, and the bill now under consideration enacts that that provision shall be continued in force, and hereafter the Bureau may appoint its employees regardless of the civil-service law, and then they would be eligible for transfer, and thereby the civil-service law would be evaded.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity to state my opposition to the method and manner in which this question is being brought up. I have listened with much interest to the discussion here on both sides of the Chamber, and it does seem that we are not attempting to improve and better the provisions of the census law and make it a credit to our nation, but we seem to be particularly anxious to reach out and bring the provisions of the civil service to all action which may be taken concerning the Census Bureau. For the first time I find myself actually in harmony with my friend from Ohio, Hon. CHARLES H. GROSVENOR. [Laughter.] I am one of those people who believe that the civil-service law is a farce and a fraud, intended to aid whichever party happens to be in You know how unanimous the Democratic party are upon all subjects; we are always unanimous; the world knows that, and we were unanimous in our demand for a civil-service law. One of the greatest statesmen that the country has ever known, and a Democrat, was the father of the civil-service law, and our party stood its sponsor. No sooner, however, had we elected a Demo-cratic President than every one of us began to feel ashamed of the father, deny the child, and call it illegitimate; and so it is to-day. I would rather rely upon a courtesy of a majority than upon the provisions of any law that can be kicked down the stairs or com-provisions of any law that can be kicked down the stairs of completely ignored in any department of the Government at will.

All of you understand the situation; you know that any law you may make will not and does not place the minority in a position to put its legs under the mahogany of the majority. A few doughnuts of last year, a little of last year's salad will be handed out to you with a great many smiles, with gracious bows and curtsies, and then you can stand out on the ash pile and enjoy it if you can, for that is all the good it will do you anyway.

Take your medicine, Democrats.

I say the whole civil-service law ought to be repealed as it is construed and administered to-day. It is an open secret that merit is not the winning card or desert recognized. The country would be better to-day if it was left dependent entirely upon the honesty of an Administration, and then if there is failure, dishonesty, or neglect the people will take hold and speedily effect a change.

You know that the workings of the civil-service law are inefficient to-day; you know that in every department of this Government under civil service, but not merit, there are employees holding positions who are not only incompetent but disreputable, and yet they are secure under the civil-service law. Why, it has become a hiss and a byword. There is not a score who will uphold the system in private, and yet you are afraid to denounce it in public. I am opposed to it.

Give the heads of the departments the control of their own clerical force, with the power to dismiss any in their department when-ever they find them incompetent, immoral, and indecent. There is no use to mince words upon this question; the good of the public service is what is needed. Let there be responsibility fixed and certain, and then hold the head of each department to strict accountability.

In this way we would have governmental business conducted at least equal to private business. I have not the time to enlarge upon this question, but I want to say that I believe that the Census Bureau should be made permanent.

I believe it has on its force some of our brainiest and brightest public servants, and it would be for the good of other departments if they could be inoculated with a little of the vim, vigor, and if they could be inoculated with a little of the vim, vigor, and intelligence of the present census force.

I admire the Director of the Census. I admire him for his ability; but I admire him more for the geniality and graceful courtesy with which he meets the trying ordeals that confront him in the matter of appointments. I have no fault to find. I have had all the favors at his hands that I deserve, and perhaps more than I should expect, but this I do not care for. If you Republicans are administering the law unjustly, unfairly, or extravagantly, then God speed you, because by your so doing it will hasten the return of the Democratic party to power, for it may be some time before we get back unless you do commit some devilment of this kind. [Laughter on Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi and Mr. HOPKINS rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi was recognized.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want one minute to make a statement.

Mr. Williams of Mississippi was recognized.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want one minute to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had recognized the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Williams]; but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins], the chairman of the committee, having risen, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS. I make the point that the debate on this amendment is exhausted, and I should like to have a vote on this. The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett]—the amendment to the amendment.

amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment, the chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. PADGETT demanded a division, but subsequently withdrew his demand.

Accordingly, the amendment to the amendment was rejected. Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his formal amendment until a vote is taken on the amendment of the gentle-man from Indiana [Mr. Hemenway]. Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I withdraw the formal motion

for a moment

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask for a vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY].

Mr. WHITE. I have an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Kentucky propose to offer his amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana? Mr. WHITE. M

My amendment was intended to be offered to the original bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY].

Mr. BINGHAM. If it is in order, let us have it read. The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "force," in line 9, the following:
"Provided further, That persons now employed in the Census Office, not including janitors, shall be eligible to appointment within the classified service without examination or certification by the Civil Service Commission, on the approval of the head of any department."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment which will be read, unless the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] desires to offer a substantial amendment.
Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. My amendment is a pro forma

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows: .

Add the following:

"And it shall be the duty of the Director of said Bureau to lay before Congress at the beginning of each session a report of the number of employees therein for the previous year, and their duties, with other information relating to the operation of said Bureau: Provided, That such report shall not be required in the years when the actual enumeration under said acts is being made."

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is in order. This bill continues each and every one of the sections of the census law; and therefore any amendment that would be germane to any section of the law is germane and in order here. Obviously, if the Chairman is right in that construc-tion, the amendment is in order; and therefore the point of order

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I did not offer this amendment for the purpose of making a speech. But the peculiar circumstances of the matter under consideration, the creation of a permanent bureau here, where it has only been temporary before, when the duties of the Census Office only related to two or three years, on account of the large number of employees that will be out of employment after the actual enumeration is over and reported, seem to make it necessary, to my mind, that there should be a report made. It is true, Mr. Chairman, that all departments make reports under the general law. But here is the Census Office, now made permanent; and, as I gather, without having read all the laws relating to the census, there will be something like seven years when the duties are not very well understand here there are the second laws there were the second laws the seco derstood here, they are not well known; we do not know how many employees may be necessary to carry on the business of this office when the general work of the enumeration ends and the tabulation is over.

Now, the object of this amendment is mainly one of economy. I know it is stated, and I have no doubt it is true, the Director is a man of high character. I hope the Director of the Census will always be so; but it seemed to my mind that without a provision of this kind advantage might be taken of the people, the great people that have to pay the taxes, and a lot of men be put in office there and no report made, nothing being done during seven omce there and no report made, nothing being done during seven years, and we have no information as to what was going on there. The amendment speaks for itself in showing what its object is. It simply provides that a report be made to Congress every year except when the enumeration is being made; so that we may have information and know whether there are employees kept there unnecessarily or not. There can be no harm in it, and I have the control of th hope the gentleman who reported the bill will accept it, as I think it is a necessary amendment to the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, when I entered the Hall of the House of Representatives this morning I was very much in favor of the pending bill; I am still in favor of the underlying principle of the bill. I believe that the Census Bureau ought to be made a permanent bureau of the Government. I believe it ought to be made one in the interest of economy in doing the census and statistical work of the United States. I believe it ought to be made one now, with the expectation of gathering to itself in the course of time all the statistical work now being done by the other departments of the Government, thereby preventing duplication of work and loss of time and money both.

But, Mr. Chairman, after listening to the discussion to-day on both sides, although still heartily and emphatically in favor of the underlying principles of the bill, and also indorsing very much the régime and administration of the present Director of the Census, and heartily hoping that so long as there is a Republican party in power he may remain at the head of the census workwith no criticism to make of the practice or theory of the Bureau's work—I can not support the bill in its present shape, until I shall have first tried to amend it by a motion which will come up in proper time to recommit it with instructions. I think the bill in its present shape is entirely too vague; too much dependent on construction for operation under it; too uncertain as to exactly what of the present law is or is not reenacted.

I am so much in favor of it that if I can not amend it I would vote for it rather than that it should not pass, even in its present chaotic condition. I want to see the principle of permanency inaugurated, even if details have to be incorporated later by new legislation. But I think it is in our power to make this a good bill, and therefore a motion will be offered to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Census for the purpose of getting a better, a detailed, properly organized, permanent census bureau, with specifications as to what the salaries shall be and as to what work shall be done, and also a bill which shall include all the present employees of the Census Bureau (not mere "laborers") under the civil-service rules, so that they can be transferred to other Departments. Why? Why, Mr. Chairman, these people have not only passed an examination more rigid than the ordinary civil-service examinations of the country, but they have given to the country quite a long term of service and have acquired a great deal of experience.

Moreover, for two set times for civil-service examinations these have been passed over and neglected, so that there are few names—very few names, comparatively speaking—upon the civil-service eligible list, and I think it would accrue to the good of the public service to enable the various Departments to have transferred to them to fill vacancies these men and women, who have already stood examination and already proved their fitness for the public service by excellence in the Department in which they have served, and therefore can lend a hope of furnishing to any other Department the character and ability that would justify appointment.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, when the proper time comes the motion to recommit, made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT will carry the House, and I hope, also, if that shall fail we will not neglect to begin the work of making a permanent bureau of the census work, however awkwardly or crudely begun.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, as debate is exhausted on this amendment, I ask for a vote.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WIL-LIAMS] has already been recognized in opposition to the amend-

Mr. HOPKINS. Let a vote be taken on this amendment now. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was disagreed to.
Mr. HOPKINS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill as amended be reported to the House with the recommendation that the amendment be adopted and that the bill as amended be favor-

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman—
Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my motion in order that a vote be taken on the motion offered by the gentle-man from Nebraska.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the word "force," line 9, the following: "Provided, That at the close of the year 1905 the clerical force of the Census Bureau shall not exceed 240 people."

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that that would have been in order under the original bill and must be in order

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I may say that I am in favor of a permanent census bureau. I have no one in the present Bureau charged to me, and therefore can not be suspected of being biased by that consideration. As I understand the purport of this bill as explained by the chairman of the committee, it professes to bring about a gradual reduction of the clerical force. But I am somewhat perplexed when I read the report of the committee and find that the report states that "upon the completion of these special subjects the office force can be reduced to a mere skeleton organization, and the officials afforded time for the consideration of the methods to be followed in taking of the Thirteenth Census." The Director uses very different language from that used in the report of the committee. The Director says that-

The present work before the Bureau is the completion of the four principal reports—population, vital statistics, agriculture, and manufacturing and mechanical inquiries—by the 1st of July, 1902, at which time it is expected the clerical force will be reduced to approximately 800 people. The special subjects required to be inquired into by the present act, so far as the same can be estimated at this time, will require a clerical force as follows:

From 1902 to 1903.....

Now, the distinguished chairman [Mr. Hopkins] admitted in his explanation that in the near future there would be additional legislation; in other words, this bill would be amended in order that we would get up statistics annually on cotton, corn, oats, wheat, etc., for the benefit of the farming interests of the country. But the Director, in the appendix to the report of the committee, in speaking of the time when the clerical force would be reduced in the Census Bureau to 240, says "at that time, unless the office is charged with new work not provided for in the act above referred to, the clerical force will likely be reduced to about 240 people."

Now, I say that the word "likely" doesn't mean as much as the term "probability." Yet the chairman of the committee says there is going to be additional legislation on this subject, and consequently the Bureau will be charged with new work. What hope have we that there will be a gradual reduction in the work of the force of the Census Bureau, when the chairman tells us that additional legislation will create "new work for the Bureau" and the Director says if you create this new work the clerical force can not be reduced? They have now 800 people, and what guarantee or hope is there to this House that it will ever reach the minimum number of 240, with the assertion of the distinguished chairman of the committee that new legislation is to be incorporated, putting additional work upon the Bureau? The Director says that if that is done you can not reduce the force.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will pardon me, I have not closed yet.

Mr. BINGHAM. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I thought he had finished.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am favorable in every respect to the adoption of a permanent bureau. I think it would be wise on the part of the Government to keep trained men there. I have no complaint to make, myself, about any officer in the Census Bureau. I have been treated with kindness and cordially by the Director of the department, his chief clerk, and others. I say I am in favor of a permanent census bureau, but I think this bill is very defective. It is vague and uncertain. It proposes to reenact the statute that temporarily created the census bureau, and make that law permanent. It does this by mere proposes to reenact the statute that temporarily created the census bureau and make that law permanent. It does this by mere reference to the title of that "act." It thereby makes permanent the salary of the Director, which is now $7,500.

I do not believe, however, that a man having charge of 240 employees ought to be paid $7,500 a year, when, under the temporary law, he had 3,000 employees under him and he was paid annually the sum of $7,500. I am not disposed to carp or complain about paying officers good salaries. The Government ought to pay its employees liberally. I have no doubt the Director earns now the salary the Government pays him, but why should it now the salary the Government pays him, but why should it remain the same if the number of his employees are reduced from 3,000 to 240?

For that reason I have offered the amendment I sent to the Clerk's desk. I shall vote to recommit this bill in accordance with the resolution of the gentleman from Indiana. The country with the resolution of the gentleman from Indiana. The country will sustain us in establishing a permanent bureau of census. I certainly do not agree with the gentleman from New York when he says that the salary of $7,500 to the Director of the Census Bureau ought to remain just as it now is, when he has 800 and more employees to look after. This is not equitable. I hope the bill will be recommitted, and I am confident a bill will be brought back that will satisfy the House.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the gentleman's amendment for the reason that I think it is too drastic, too positive in dealing with the force to be employed in this work in the future, when perhaps there will be intermediary legislation. It is well for this House to understand that the bill presented by the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on the Census, reenacts every line and every word of the act of March 3, 1899, establishing a census bureau to take the census of 1900, and it also reenacts all amendments to that legislation.

That bill was prepared to provide for a temporary service, the work of which it was expected would be consummated within a few years; and I challenge gentlemen to say that anything in this bill changes a single word or line in the act of 1899 except the provision-

That nothing herein contained shall be construed to establish a census bureau permanent beyond the Twelfth Census.

In reference to the civil service, it has been made notorious and emphatic in this debate that the Civil Service Commissioners could not, should the existing law continue, transfer this body of subordinate force to the civil service. The only way that could be done is—whatever form it may take, whether this bill be passed or recommitted with instructions—to insert in the bill a passer of the civil service. or recommitted with instructions—to insert in the bill a paragraph directly and in a mandatory form placing the present employees under the provisions of the civil service law.

I am in favor of a permanent census bureau which, I trust, will in time embody all the bureaus and divisions of the public serv-ice, so that the Congress and the people may have all needed information from one central authority, and not, as now, a Bureau of Labor, of Statistics, and many other subdivisions in the several departments of the Government. If they are to be absorbed in the Census Bureau, all right; if in the Labor Bureau, all right; if in the Bureau of Statistics, all right. I want one bureau to be the crystallized center for information for members of the House and the country. I am in favor of a standard bureau which shall be permanent send to the desk.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I offer the amendment which I

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That for the purposes herein stated all employees who have been in the service of said Bureau and relieved by discontinuance of the work shall be eligible for appointment.

Mr. HOPKINS. I make a point of order against the amend-

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Upon the point of order I wish to say, without its coming out of my time, that this provision is germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. The amendment might not be germane at this time except as applicable to the proposition which the House has already adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. It is difficult to understand the precise bearing of the amendment, and the Chair has some difficulty in ruling, but he thinks that on the whole he will rule the amendment in order and recognize the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I fully understand that my entry Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I fully understand that my entry into this discussion may be construed by some as laying me under the charge of being a "carping critic," to use the language of the gentleman in charge of this bill. At the present time the Treasury of the country is overflowing. The times are prosperous. We have in the Treasury to-day a surplus of nearly $350,000,000. This is the beginning of a session of Congress. It is a suitable occasion, a suitable time and place to begin a system of legislation which shall look to cutting down the surplus in the United States Treasury. One way to accomplish this is by reducing taxation, the other way is by the passage of bills like this.

Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with some other members that this House may pass a crude or insufficiently considered measure

Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with some other members that this House may pass a crude or insufficiently considered measure and then send it to the Senate of the United States for perfection. An act of legislation by either House should be as if it had the sanction as a final law. I believe it is due to the membership of this House, to the Senate with our best indorsement and written therein the best judgment of the House. Nor am I in accord with the aim presented by this bill, which casts upon the Approximation. with the aim presented by this bill, which casts upon the Appropriations Committee the burden of determining when and to what extent the census force shall be reduced hereafter.

We have all as legislators been confronted with the difficulty of dispensing with positions after they are once created. A provision of law containing a maximum and minimum number is nearly always construed in favor of the former standard and against the Government. Under the operation of this bill if employees are to be dropped in a year or two or three years from now, whose constituents will be selected to be dropped? When such reductions do take place we must change the whole course of our human nature or we will be found going to the chairman or to the members of the Committee on Appropriations or to the appointing or creating or destroying power and complaining when our constituents are dropped from the roll of the Census Bureau to curtail expenses. If it be claimed that these census employees will then be absorbed into other departments yet it is the creation of new offices and encouragement to unnecessary extravagance.

I do not agree with the sentiment expressed on this side of the House a few moments ago, that public patronage will "make cowards of us all."

I know it has been whispered about that of the six or eight hundred places created permanently by this bill that each Member and Senator of both parties will get one.

But, gentlemen, this is delusive, and this promised place is elusive. With the civil-service coils thrown around the employees of the Community with the strengthening attitude of the President of the Government, with the strengthening attitude of the President as recently evinced, what Democrat can, under the provisions of this bill, safely feel that a single constituent of his will get a place? Vain hope, if any such there be. Democratic duty is plain.

The members of this committee are able men; they now know the sentiment of the House, and a return of this bill to them with the sentiment of the House, and a return of this publication. instructions will bring forth a new measure on this subject so hedged about and safeguarded, so full and plain in its provisions that the permanent census bureau established by law thereunder will not only engross the other statistical departments of the Government, but its work will be our pride, and will gain the admiration of the world.

I say it is our right and our duty to ourselves and our constituents on this side of the House to stand only for such appropriations and only for such policies as will secure the interest of those constituents and bring economy to the administration of our country's affairs. A measure like this, which, in my judgment, is a catch-as-catch-can, let-her-go-Gallagher, free-for-all entry into the public Treasury, should not commend itself to the Democracy of the House or to the Republicans on the other side. [Applause or the Democratic side.]

on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the situation will not result in the defeat of this measure, and I had hoped that long ago, bowing to the manifest will of the House, the gen-tleman in charge of this bill would have consented to one of the motions to recommit. If I could have my way about that motion it would not be exactly in the words of the motion made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Burkett], because it is possible that there are limitations when there ought to be the broadest field of liberality. But it is the best thing offered, and I hope that the bill will go back to the committee, and that after the discus-sion had here the committee will consent to report back a bill expressive of the manifest views of the House.

expressive of the manifest views of the House.

I do not believe that it is safe to pass a measure of the patchwork kind that this is, with all the amendments that have been put upon it; and while I voted for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Hemenway], I would very much prefer that the bill go back again and come to the House with a specific enactment telling us exactly what we are passing upon. I am as much in favor of a permanent census bureau as is the committee. I believe that is the wisdom to which Congress will be carried. I believe that this census has developed the value of the work of giving statistical information to the people of the country, and I quite agree that we ought to have it oftener than once in ten years. once in ten years.

I quite agree that at least once in five years we ought to have a very full statistical report of all the industrial progress of the country; but I want the bill to express distinctly what we are doing; and now that we are living under a system of appointment to office by the civil-service organization, I particularly want Congress to show to the world that while we may uphold the law and the power that enforces it, we are willing to approve merit wherever we find it. There is one system in this country called the civil-service system, and there is another one called the merit system. There is very little of the one that ever encroaches upon the territory of the other. [Laughter and applause.] Here we have an opportunity to express our opinions in favor of the merit system. We apply it absolutely to the men who have stood the test during all these years merit system. We apply it abothe test during all these years.

I will not be driven from my opinion notwithstanding the fact that my genial Jeffersonian Democratic colleague and friend from Ohio [Mr. Norton] comes and nestles down beside me on my original position and platform. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HAY. If there is no objection, I withdraw the amendment I offered.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] will be withdrawn.

Mr. HOPKINS. Let us have a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I withdraw it. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to recommit the hill.

Mr. BURKETT. I would ask that that be read again. The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it may again be reported to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

I move that the bill be reported to the House with the following recommendation, namely:

"That the bill (H. R. 198) creating a permanent census be recommitted to the Select Committee on the Census with instructions to prepare and report back as a substitute therefor a bill providing for a detailed organization of a permanent census bureau, and with a provision therein to place the present employees within the classified service."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HOPKINS. Division, Mr. Chairman. [During the count.] I withdraw the demand.

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes have it, and the motion is agreed to.
Mr. HOPKINS. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Moody, of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 198) and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill be recommitted to the Select Committee on the Census, with instructions to prepare and report back as a substitute therefor a bill providing for a detailed organization of a permanent census bureau, and with a provision therein placing the present employees within the classified service.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the instructions.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask for the previous question on the motion.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask for the previous question on the motion. The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered. Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays. The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the recommendation reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOPKINS. And on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Thirty-eight gentlemen have arisen. The other side. Those opposed will rise. The Chair is unable to deother side. Those opposed will rise. The Chair is unable to decide. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-five gentlemen have arisen in opposition. On this question the ayes are 38, the noes 175, and the demand for the yeas and nays is lost. In the opinion of the Chair the ayes have it, the motion is agreed to, and the bill is accordingly recommitted.

On motion of Mr. BURKETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE TO MRS. M'KINLEY.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3239) providing for the free transportation of all mail matter sent and received by Mrs. Ida S. McKinley.

Be it enacted, etc., That all mail matter carried by the post to Ida S. Mc-Kinley, widow of the late William McKinley, or sent by her, under her writ-ten autograph signature, be conveyed free of postage during her natural life.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read,

In line 3 strike out the word "carried" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sent." also in line 3 strike out the word "to;" and insert in lieu thereof the word "by."

In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "or sent by her."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the bill read as amended, so that we may understand exactly what it is.

The bill as proposed to be amended was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for the free transportation of all mail matter sent by Mrs. Ida S. Mc-Kinley."

On motion of Mr. BROMWELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.
Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday next.

C. J. BASSETT, Secretary of State. Senate joint memorial No 6. By Purtill and Gooding. A memorial to the Senate of the United States, protesting against the enactment of House resolution No. 3717, known as the "Grout bill," and recommending in lieu thereof substitute for House resolution No. 3717, known as the "Wadsworth bill."

To the honorable the Senate of the United States:

To the honorable the Senate of the United States:

Your memorialists, the senate and house of representatives of the State of Idaho, respectfully memorialize your honorable body, and represent—
That one of the principal interests in the State of Idaho, one in which the greatest amount of capital is invested, and upon the welfare of which the greater number and most deserving part of our people are dependent, is the production and disposition of live stock.

That any legislation, national or State, which in effect discriminates against said industry would be harmful not only to those directly interested therein by reason of investment, but to the many whose vocation is the care and management of live stock, the farmer who raises hay for their consumption, the many merchants and general storekeepers who trade almost exclusively in cattle-raising districts, and a large part of our people who are more indirectly benefited by and dependent thereon.

That the bill known as the "Grout bill" (H. R. 3717), while extremely harmful to the live-stock interests and those dependent thereon, would not, in our opinion, protect either the dairy farmer who produces butter or the public who consume it against competition with and the consumption of the artificial product colored to represent the original.

That while not desiring to enter into the merits of oleomargarine as a food product, we believe that the public who do not wish to use it as a food and the dairy farmer who produces butter are best protected against the imitation article by the provisions of section 2 of the substitute for House resolution No. 3717, known as the "Wadsworth bill," which in substance and effect provides, under penalty, that oleomargarine can only be sold in original packages, sealed by the Government revenue stamp, and distinctly marked in the substance and upon the wrapper with the word "oleomargarine."

That for these reasons we memoralize your honorable body and protest against the enactment of House resolution No. 3717, and respectfully recommend for your favorable consideration substitute for House resolution No. 3717, known as the "Wadsworth bill."
This senate joint memorial passed the senate on the 14th day of February,

THOMAS F. TERRELL,

President of the Senate.

This senate joint memorial passed the house of representatives on the 26th day of February, 1901.

GLEN P. McKINLEY.
Speaker of House of Representatives.

This senate joint memorial was received by the governor on the 28th day of February, 1901, at 3 o'clock p. m., and approved on the 28th day of February, 1901.

FRANK W. HUNT, Governor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HALE. Is it the intention of the Senator from New Jersey that the Department shall send to the Senate an abstract of every indorsement of every kind on this subject that has come to the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. KEAN. I will state to the Senator from Maine that the resolution is an exact copy of one heretofore passed, except that resolution is an exact copy of one heretofore passed, except that this applies to the topographic survey and the one last year applied to the hydrographic department of the Coast Survey.

Mr. HALE. Certainly, if in every case we are to ask that the Department shall send to us an abstract of every paper and every indorsement and every clipping that comes to it upon a subject, we shall soon find ourselves pretty well encumbered.

Mr. KEAN. This is a small matter—

Mr. HALE. It is not very voluminous?

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business that order is closed and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The Chair calls the attention of Senators to the limitation on debate contained in Rule VIII. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill is not very long, and I prefer to hear it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.
Mr. TELLER. Is that bill now subject to objection?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was taken up on motion.
Mr. TELLER. It will not, then, be subject to the five-minute

Mr. TELLER. It can not be possible that this bill has gone so far that an objection will not carry it over. It is a bill that ought not to be debated under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HALE. What is the bill?

Mr. BURROWS. To establish a new department.

Mr. TELLER. I understand the bill is one to establish a new

Mr. TELLER. I understand the bill is one to establish a new department—the department of commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. TELLER. To add a new member to the Cabinet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. HALE. I hope those in charge of this bill will not seek

Mr. HALE. I hope those in charge of this bill will not seek to confine the discussion to the five-minute rule. There are Senators here who have very grave objections to the creation of another Executive Department, and who want an opportunity to discuss the proposition at length. The five-minute rule was never contemplated to apply to subjects of large general importance. I do not know but that this matter has gone too far to object to it

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, it has not. The bill is under Rule VIII. Notwithstanding a matter has been taken up and proceeded with, it is open to objection at any time. Therefore, objection may be made to the consideration of this bill now; and then it will be in order for the Senator from Minnesota, if he so desires, to move to proceed to its consideration, notwithstanding the objection. If that motion prevails, then the bill will be before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, without the limitation of Rule VIII.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I will say that if it is necessary to secure reasonable debate, I am going to object to the consideration of the bill now; and I do object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. NELSON. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Notwithstanding the objec-

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir; and I shall desire to make a brief statement if that motion shall be adopted.

Mr. TELLER. I hope the Senator will make it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill referred to by him notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, I hope, by unanimous consent, the Senator will be permitted to make his statement, so that we may bear it before we wate on the motion to take up the bill. I should Senator will be permitted to make his statement, so that we may hear it before we vote on the motion to take up the bill. I should like to hear the statement before we pass upon the motion.

Mr. NELSON. I intend to make a brief statement relative to the scope and nature of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One moment. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Cockrell] misunderstood the status of the matter. There is no unanimous consent asked for. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] has moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection which has been made. which has been made.
Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Now the Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to make a statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Minnesota said he wanted to make a short statement. I should like to hear the statement before I am called upon to vote on this motion. The statement may justify my vote for the motion; otherwise I shall vote against taking up the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to make a statement.

Mr. HALE. May I inquire, before that is done, whether the hill has been read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been read.

Mr. HALE. Then I ask that the bill be read, so that we may know what its provisions are. Afterwards the Senator can make his statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection having been made, the bill is not before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I so understand. But upon the question of taking up this grave matter, it seems that the Senate might have the proposition upon which the motion is made read, so that we may understand what is sought to be brought up. I hope the Senator understand what is sought to be brought up. I hope the Senator will not object to the bill being read.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no; I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion now pending to proceed to the consideration of this bill notwithstanding the objection shall prevail, will the bill then be up for consideration under the five-minute rule?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not; it will then be subject to debate without limitation.

Mr. NELSON. I have asked the Senate to take up the bill for

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not; it will then be subject to debate without limitation.

Mr. NELSON. I have asked the Senate to take up the bill for consideration. After that shall have been done I shall make a brief statement of the scope and merits of the bill; and it will then be open to general debate. I have no disposition—and it was under a misapprehension of the rules that I made the motion in the form I did—to have debate on the bill limited to the five-minute rule. I supposed when the bill was taken up on motion it would be exempt from the five-minute rule. Under the motion, as I now make it, if it be carried, the bill will be open to general debate and will not be under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HALE. Now let the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] to proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce.

establish the department of commerce

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I do not intend to take up the time of the Senate in any lengthy general debate, and for that reason I have prepared a very brief statement, which I shall read to the Senate in order to save time, giving the purpose and scope of the bill.

(1) There is among our Executive Departments no department that stands charged with the care, promotion, and development of our vast commercial, manufacturing, mining, and other industrial enterprises. The agricultural interests of the country are well served and taken care of by the Agricultural Department, but the other great industries of our country, as well as our great commerce, are without any direct governmental guidance and assistance. These vast interests of our people—the great throbbings of our economic and industrial life—have no governmental head, direction, or guidance, but are left to shift for themselves without any system, harmony, or unity of action, so essential to thorough and permanent progress. Such a condition is not only hampering in dealing with ourselves, but is much more embarrassing, retarding, and injurious when we come to compete with other nations and enter the competitive field of the world's traffic and commerce. To enter the markets of foreign countries effectively and systematically we must thoroughly familiarize ourselves with the laws, trade conditions, resources, and wants of those countries. This can only be done systematically and effectively through an organ of our Government charged with such task—the gathering and dissemination of the necessary information.

This matter is now becoming more important and more urgent than ever before. Our productive capacity, pressed by an abundance of capital, labor, and raw material, far exceeds our own wants, and will so continue with increased force and persistence, so that the great problem is and will continue to be to secure and hold greater and more extensive markets abroad. To American capital, American labor, and American enterprise this is a most vital question. Without greater markets abroad, industrial stagnation and congestion, superinduced by too rapid production, are liable at any time to set in and produce a reaction that will be demoralizing, damaging, and destructive to all classes of our peo-ple, and will not only bring an economic convulsion, but will also raise serious social problems, difficult to meet and adjust. There is, therefore, from this standpoint and view, an urgent demand for a department of commerce, to act as an intermediary and support for the American people in meeting and solving these prob-

(2) All the other countries of the world, great and small, have, with but few exceptions, felt the need of such a governmental organ and help and have, in substance, in one form or another, such a department as is contemplated in this bill. And what other countries have felt the need and made use of we ought to avail ourselves of, too. Without the help of such department we will not be on a footing of equality and will in many respects, as against our commercial and industrial rivals, be handicapped and at a great disadvantage at a great disadvantage.

(3) All this has been apparent for a long time to our commercial and industrial world. The boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and other similar organizations of all our larger cities and industrial centers throughout the land, East and West, North and South, with one accord, by memorial, resolution, petition, and letter, petition and ask for legislation establishing such a department. The President of the United States has seen the necessity and demand for such a department, and hence in his last annual message recommended the measure to Congress.

There is further a cogent reason for the establishment of such department. It is this: That some of the other departments are overloaded and overburdened with work and duties foreign to their main and chief purpose and not germane to their principal functions. This is especially true of the Treasury Department. The Interior Department was established in 1849 to relieve the other departments of some of their burdens. Nearly all the business assigned to it, in the first instance, came by transfer from the other departments. It took the Patent and Census offices from the State Department, Pensions and Indian Affairs from the War Department, and the General Land Office from the Treasury Department. There is fully as much occasion and necessity now for relieving some of the other departments of their burdens as there was in 1849. There is also this further reason: That there are scattered in the various Executive Departments divisions, bureaus, and branches of the public service disconnected with and isolated from the principal functions of the Department, but all connected with and relating to our commercial and industrial development. If these several divisions and branches of the public service can be grouped under one head and be made to articuare overloaded and overburdened with work and duties foreign lic service can be grouped under one head and be made to articulate in harmony and for a common purpose and end, instead of being isolated, they will become much more useful and effective and accomplish much more good, both singly and in the aggregate.

The bill establishing the department of commerce makes it "the province and duty of the department to foster, promote, and "the province and duty of the department to foster, promote, and develop the foreign and domestic commerce, the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fishery industries, the labor interests, and the transportation facilities of the United States." It establishes two new bureaus, which do not now exist—a bureau of manufactures, to foster, promote, and develop the various manufacturing industries and markets for the same at home and abroad, and a bureau of mining, to which is attached the Geological Survey, charged with the duty of fostering, promoting, and developing our various mining industries. The bill transfers from the Treasury Department the following branches of the public service, which are not germane and have not any direct connection with which are not germane and have not any direct connection with the fiscal or financial affairs of the Government, to wit: Life-Saving, Light-House, Marine-Hospital, and Steamboat-Inspection Service, Bureau of Navigation and Shipping Commissioners, Bureau of Immigration, Bureau of Statistics, and Coast and Geodetic Survey, and from the State Department the Bureau of Foreign Commerce, and consolidates with the Bureau of Statistics

All these matters pertain not to the financial or fiscal affairs of the Government, but Senators can all see that they have a direct relation to the vast shipping industries of the country. The bill transfers from the Interior Department the Commissioner of Railroads, the Census and Patent Offices, and also the Geological Survey, which is attached to the new bureau of mining. The Department of Labor and the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, both outside of any Executive Department, are also transferred to the new department.

It will be perceived by a mere inspection that the branches of the public service thus transferred to the department of commerce are all connected with and germane to the work and duties assigned to the new department. By securing harmony and cooperation under one head, and by causing them to articulate to gether and for one great common purpose, all these branches of the public service will become more useful and effective, and in the aggregate will be able effectively to carry out and discharge the work and duties of the new department.

While the consular service, on account of its quasi diplomatic character, in some cases is still retained by the State Department, nevertheless all our consular representatives are, by the provisions of this bill, required, under the direction of the secretary of commerce, to gather and compile, from time to time, useful and material information and statistics in respect to the commerce, industries, and markets of the countries and places to which such consular officers are accredited, and to send reports quarterly, or oftener if required, of the information and statistics thus gathered and compiled to the secretary.

The increase in salaries is moderate and quite limited—$8,000 for the secretary, $4,000 for the assistant secretary, and $3,000 for the chief of the bureau of manufactures. The Geological Survey the chief of the bureau of manufactures. The Geological Survey being transferred and united with the bureau of mining, and the Chief of the Geological Survey being made the head of this bureau, no additional salary is involved. A limited clerical force will be required in the secretary's office and in the bureau of manufactures, and a few additional clerks in the bureau of mining and geological survey. Outside of this there is no occasion for an increase in the clerical force, as the bureaus and divisions transferred are now all equipped with an ample clerical force. In my opinion, from $50,000 to $60,000 per year would fully cover all increase of salary involved in the establishment of this department.

This department, equipped as contemplated in this bill, will be a most potent factor in our commercial and industrial development. It will aid us in extending our commerce at home and abroad. It will aid us in securing better and greater markets for all American products abroad. It will protect our laboring men against improper immigration and bring them in closer relation against improper immigration and bring them in closer relation and better harmony with the employers of labor. It will serve to remove the many clogs and drawbacks in our industrial development. It will breathe new life and vigor into the industrial life of the nation and do for that what the Agricultural Department is doing so well and effectively for the American farmer.

I desire to add a few words supplemental to this brief statement of the scope and merits of the bill. This measure was originally prepared in the Fifty-fifth Congress by the Senator from Maine [Mr. Frye] who so ably presides over the deliberations of this body. No action was taken on the bill at that time. In the last Congress the bill was referred to a subcommittee, of which I had the honor of being chairman. The bill was somewhat amended and reported favorably, I think, about the middle of the last session. It remained on the Calendar and we were unable to reach it at that time. The bill is now substantially the same, with some it at that time. The bill is now substantially the same, with some changes in phraseology to improve its language, as that which was on the Calendar of this body during the latter half of the last

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from Minnesota permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. Is it not true that this measure came from the Committee on Commerce at the last session of Congress with a unanimous report, and that it comes from the Committee on Commerce at this session with a unanimous report?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly. I am glad the Senator from Georgia has called my attention to that fact.

Mr. CLAY. Both political parties gave the bill their unanimous support, I understand.

Mr. NELSON. At the last session the Committee on Commerce had the bill under consideration and went carefully over it, and there was a unanimous favorable report from the committee, and there was a unanimous favorable report from the committee, and the same committee, with some additional and new members on it, at this session has reported it in the same manner.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me

for a moment?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly. Mr. BERRY. I desire to state that I was not present in the committee, either at the last session or at the present session, when the report was ordered. That is all I wish to say about it.

Mr. NELSON. I am not willing to take up the time of the Senate any further in debating or discussing this question. I senate any further in debating of discussing this question. I may add, however, that I have on my desk a large bundle of letters, petitions, communications, etc., from commercial bodies, chambers of commerce, boards of trade all over this land, all earnestly favoring this measure. I am willing to answer any questions, if questions are asked, but I am not disposed further to take up the time of the Senate in debating the bill. If gentlemen would like to hear an explanation as to any particular significant. men would like to hear an explanation as to any particular point of the bill, I shall be very glad to explain it, if I can.

Now, Mr. President, unless there is some other disposition, the bill having once been read at length, I ask that it be read section by section for amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I desire to state, in reference to the statement made here that the bill was unanimously re-ported by the Committee on Commerce at this session, that I was not present at the meeting when that report was ordered to be made. I have not read the bill; in fact, I know nothing of its details, although I will state that I am disposed to favor a department of commerce, Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask the Senator having the bill in charge whether he intends to press it to a vote to-day. Is that the purpose?

Mr. NELSON. Not necessarily, if there are any objections.

I do not intend to force the measure at all.

Mr. TELLER. A similar bill may have been reported at the last session of Congress. If it was, nobody ever called the attention of Congress to it. I confess I never saw it. I did not know it was here. This bill has appeared on our tables in print for the first time this morning. Nobody has seen it. Nobody has had an opportunity to see it.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me? I think a bill similar to this passed the Senate at the last session.

Mr. TELLER. I think not. It may be that there is necessity for this bill, but I think there is necessity for some amendments before it is passed.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I do so because of the Senator's great familiarity with the subject, he having been Secretary of the Interior. Now that the entanglements of the Government with the Pacific railways have been eliminated, what, under the law, are the remaining functions of the Commissioner of Railroads?

Mr. TELLER. I do not think there are any. I think the office of Commissioner of Railroads could be abolished if it were not that there is a desire occasionally to put a man in office. That is all there is in it now.

there is in it now

I wish to ask the Senator from Minnesota who seems to have this bill in charge upon what theory the committee propose to transfer from the Interior Department, which has charge of all our land interests, the Geological Bureau, which deals largely with questions pertaining to mines and of late years somewhat with questions pertaining to mines and of late years somewhat with reference to surveys of public lands and matters that pertain particularly to such lands. I wish to know upon what theory that provision is put in. I think it is the first time it has ever been put in, although I do not know.

Mr. NELSON. No, it was in the other bill. Will the Senator allow me to make an explanation?

Mr. TELLER. That is what I want.

Mr. NELSON. I will state that the Geological Survey, with which, of course, the Senator is familiar, he having been at the head of the Interior Department, belongs to the Interior Department. The work of the Geological Survey is confined largely to exploring our mineral resources throughout the country and making reports on that subject. Now, this bill proposes to transfer the Geological Survey, just as it is, without disturbing its functions in the least, to this new department, and couples with it a bureau of mining, making the present head of the Geological Survey the head of the new bureau, termed the bureau of mining and geological survey. In addition to the duties that are now imposed upon the Geological Survey, it directs the head of it to gather, compile, and furnish all valuable, necessary, and useful information in respect to the mineral resources of the United States. It is simply cumulative, and does not in any way change the scope and purpose of the Geological Survey. It simply adds new duties and makes its head the head of the bureau of mining and geological survey.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that the Geological Survey have for years been doing the very things they are to do hereafter. Whether they had authority to do them or not, they have been doing them.

There is in the Land Office a mining division, which deals with legal questions that come up concerning the entry and patenting of mining claims. Do I understand that by this bill that bureau will be transferred to the Geological Survey

Mr. NELSON.

No, sir. Where there is not Mr. TELLER.

Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. TELLER. I do not see why it should not be, if you are to take the mining business from the Interior Department, where it belongs, and put it in this new department.

Mr. NELSON. I will say, if I am not interrupting the Senator from Colorado, that we do not transfer—

Mr. TELLER. No, I am not making a speech. I am trying to get information.

Mr. NELSON. We do not transfer that division of the Interior Department relating to mining to which the honorable Sena-tor refers, because that division of the Interior Department is charged with passing upon the validity of mining claims and the entry of mining claims, and matters of that kind. All that perentry of mining claims, and matters of that kind. All that pertains to entries of land, whether agricultural, timber, or mineral lands, must necessarily belong to that Department, because it is an adjudicating and an appellate Department in respect to those matters. The Geological Survey, the Senator will remember, has nothing to do with passing upon the validity of mineral claims. That is foreign to its purpose. The Geological Survey is transferred and its Director is made the head of the bureau of mining and geological survey, which is simply a bureau of an advisory and geological survey, which is simply a bureau of an advisory character, to gather and compile and disseminate useful information in respect to the mining industries of the United States.

Now, the other branch of the service to which the honorable Senator refers, which belongs to the Interior Department—I refer to the adjudication of and passing upon mineral claims—it seems to me, and I think the Senator will agree with me, ought to be left in the Department charged with passing upon our public land questions. That is the view I have taken of it, and if I am land questions. That is the view I have taken of it, and if I am mistaken I shall be glad to hear from the honorable Senator from Colorado, because I remember well that for many years he was the very able and energetic head of that Department—one of the ablest men who has ever had charge of that Department with whom it has been my pleasure to do any business.

Mr. TELLER. I must, of course, be pleased with the compliment which the Senator has paid me, but I am now more interested in getting a reasonable and decent bill than I am in my fame as Secretary of the Interior.

I do not know, and I do not believe the Senator does, and I do not believe anybody else does, what jurisdiction the Geological Bureau will have or assume after they get to work under this bill. I want a little opportunity to see what this measure is going to do. The mining interests of the United States are now under the control of the Interior Department. There is no complaint anywhere, that I know of, as to the administration of affairs under the Department, except of the delay, which is occasioned by the fact that the Department have not the force they ought to have. Last year there were more mining properties entered and patented than year there were more mining properties entered and patented than in any other year in our history, and the number will increase every year, undoubtedly. While I have no objection to the Geological Bureau making any geological surveys and geological reports which they now make, which intimately and closely connect the discovery and exploiting of veins, etc., I do not want it to be possible that they shall be a mining bureau that can take charge in any way or manner of the work that is now being done in the Interior Department. I think this bill will need some little in the Interior Department. I think this bill will need some little mediation before we get through with it.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator in this connection allow me to say a few words more?

Mr. TELLER. Proceed.

Mr. NELSON. I desire first to call his attention to section 6:

That the office of Director of the Geological Survey, and all that pertains to the same, is hereby transferred from the Department of the Interior to the department of commerce; and there is hereby established in the department of commerce a bureau to be known as the bureau of mining and geological survey, of which the Director of the Geological Survey shall be the head; said bureau—

Now, here is the language to which I wish to call the attention of the Senator:

Said bureau shall have charge of the Geological Survey, and it shall also be its province and duty to foster, promote, and develop the mining industries of the United States by gathering, compiling, and disseminating practical and useful information concerning the mineral resources and mining industries of the United States, and by such other methods as may be directed by the secretary or prescribed by law.

Now, in this connection, permit me to call the Senator's attention to the last proviso on page 7, line 19:

And provided further, That all laws prescribing the work and defining the duties of the several bureaus, offices, departments, or branches of the public service by this act transferred to and made a part of the department of commerce shall, so far as the same are not in conflict with the provisions of this act, remain in full force and effect until otherwise provided by law.

Now, the jurisdiction over mineral lands and mineral entries and all that, to which the Senator refers, is not disturbed in the least bit. It leaves the Geological Survey with exactly the scope and power it has now, and then entails upon it the duty of acquiring and disseminating useful information in respect to our mineral resources. It in no wise disturbs the mineral administration of the Land Department.

Mr. TELLER. That may be true. What I wanted the Senator to tell me, which he has not told me, is upon what theory the geological work is proposed to be put in the department of commerce. It naturally belongs where it is.

Mr. NELSON. While this department is termed the department of commerce of commerce, I will say to the honorable Senator from Colorado that in the original bill it was called the department of commerce and industries.

Mr. TELLER. I think that would be a better term for it

Mr. NELSON. We thought at this time, comparing it with the terminology as to other departments, that it would be better to leave it with a single name. We have a Department of State, a Department of War, a Department of the Navy, a Post-Office Department, a Department of Justice, and so on, all with one single name, and so we thought, as a matter of simplicity, that it was better to have one single name, in this instance of the college. it was better to have one single name in this instance and to call it the department of commerce.

Now, we grouped it under this head for this purpose: The mining industries of the United States are of great importance. They are, perhaps, next or nearly so to our great agricultural interests. The Senator is familiar with the work of the Geological Survey.

In addition to that, this new department is required to gather and compile statistics and information in respect to our mineral and mining resources and to disseminate it among the public. That is the object and purpose of it, and inasmuch as that is a matter which bears upon our commercial and industrial interests, we thought it proper to group it in this department.

I have heard no objection from any of the departments in respect to this matter. All of the heads of the different departments are familiar with this bill, and from not one head of a department am I advised directly or indirectly that there is any objection to the transfer of this bureau or any other bureau

Mr. TELLER. If there is to be a mining bureau established, and it does not do any more than the Senator says it does, it is not worth while to establish it, because that work is now being done by the Geological Bureau, and nobody is finding any fault. There has been entertained by the miners a notion that they ought to have a bureau, but this will not answer their demand by any

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I want a chance to look at this bill. I have not seen it before. It is a very important bill. It cuts into the departments that exist without, it seems to me, rhyme or reason, and it will make a department bigger than some of the old departments are. I do not think the bill ought to be taken up at this time and in this way. As I said, the bill has been printed only this morning, and the property has just been printed. I do not ask to displace the bill. report has just been printed. I do not ask to displace the bill, but it ought to go over by consent antil some of us can have a chance to look at it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am very strongly in favor of this bill. I believe it to be eminently desirable. I shall at the proper time offer one or two slight amendments in regard to the method of transferring the commercial statistics from the State Department to this proposed department, and I think that the Senator in charge of the bill will have no objection to them when I present them.

It is very proper that everything which comes from our consuls relating to the statistics of commerce and conveying information as to the opportunities to develop commerce in foreign countries under the new department. But it is important to remember that the consuls also report, as it is their duty to do, a great deal of political and diplomatic information. Much of that ought not to be printed; much of it is confidential. In many places the consuls, although they are not diplomatic representatives, perform the duties of diplomatic representatives, owing, perhaps, to their distance from the center where the minister or ambassador may be or to the fact that they are representing this Government in a colony or dependency of some other power. It is therefore important, Mr. President, that before their commercial and statistical information is turned over to the Department of Commerce it should pass through the hands of a representative of the Secretary of State in the State Department.

The amendments which I propose to offer are mere matters of detail and do not affect the purpose of the bill in seeking to transfer commercial statistics from the State Department to this new I do not wish to be understood as in any sense sbill. I desire merely to offer amendments which I department. opposing this bill. I desire merely to offer amendments which I think will improve it and make more specific the transfer that is there intended.

This, I believe, is the only work transferred from the State De This, I believe, is the only work transferred from the State Department. The other transfers come from the Interior and the Treasury Departments. I believe those Departments to be now greatly overcrowded with work. A great many heterogeneous and dissimilar subjects are crowded in upon them. I believe it would make for good administration to have them systematically concentrated under one head, as proposed in this bill, and I am only sorry that, in arranging for one of the surveys to go there, the committee did not provide that all the surveys should be concentrated under one bureau of surveys, which should be in the new department or in some department, instead of having four or five or half a dozen surveys going at once at enormous expense, or five or half a dozen surveys going at once at enormous expense, and not yet able to produce a good topographical map of the

I think the bill might perhaps be improved in that way, but that is in the direction of extending the measure and not cutting it down. As I read the bill, I believe most of the bureaus pro-posed to be transferred are instrumentalities of commerce, and I think it would make very much for good administration to bring them together under a new department, and I can not see that it would not improve both the Interior and the Treasury Departments to be somewhat relieved, for they are now very greatly overloaded with all kinds of work. But in discussing the bill it may be found better to take in some things and leave out others. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will press the bill now, while the Senate is not engaged with any other matter requiring immediate attention, for I think it would be very desirable if we could deal with it at this early day in the session.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the bill is certainly a great innovation and a great surprise to some Senators. I have not known what was in it or what was contemplated by it until this morn-Whether it received discussion and scrutiny in the important Committee on Commerce I do not know, but I have been told that it passed without any discussion, and that the Senator from Minnesota was directed to report it—Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to interrupt him at this point?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.
Mr. NELSON. I will say that this same bill, or substantially the same bill, with the exception of a few verbal changes, was brought up before the Committee on Commerce at the last sestimates. sion and fully considered by everybody present. There was quite a comprehensive and lengthy report, which was read at length, and, barring one or two members who were absent, every member of the committee fully understood it. It was fully debated, and, o far as I know, the committee are unanimous.

Mr. CULLOM. May I interrupt the Senator from Minnesota

for a moment?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir; but I am speaking in the time of the

Mr. NELSON.
Senator from Maine.
Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to make

Mr. HALE. Certainly.
Mr. CULLOM. I stated a while ago that I understood a similar bill had passed this body at the last session. I find I was mistaken in that statement. It was not passed at the last session or at any other session, but I remembered distinctly that such a bill was reported by the Senator from Minnesota either at the last session or the one before, and at that time there seemed to be no opposition to it. I failed to remember the fact that it was not actually passed. I thought it went through the Senate and was sent to the other House, but I find I was mistaken. I desired merely to state this fact.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to make suggestion?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I have no disposition to hurry this matter, and suggest to the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Coloado that we let the bill go over and take it up to-morrow at the close of the morning business. Can we agree to that?

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. Mason] has given notice that he will address the Senate, or seek to do so, to-morrow after the close of morning business, upon a subject which will give rise to extended controversy, and that will have precedence. I should not want for one to acree

I should not want, for one, to agree

Mr. NELSON. Very well; I overlooked that fact. Then I would suggest Wednesday, at the close of the morning business.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me to suggest that the limited number of Senators present ought not to undertake to determine what the Senate will do on Wednesday. The Senator from Minnesota can move to take up his bill whenever he pleases, after the morning business is disposed of, and there is no doubt the Senate will go ahead with it; but there ought not to be any attempt to secure unanimous consent for a proposition of that sort, in view of the limited number of Senators now present.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent—I think there will be no objection—that this bill may remain as the unfinished business.

Mr. HALE. It is the unfinished business.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that it remain as the unfinished business

Mr. HALE. The Senator does not need to do that.
Mr. TELLER. It will remain the unfinished business unless displaced.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. No; it is not the unfinished business.

It has been taken up by a vote of the Senate, and the unfinished business.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. No, sir; it is not the unfinished business. When there is an unfinished business, it is taken up at 2 o'clock, having been under consideration when, on a previous day, the Senate adjourned. But when measures which are taken up in the morning hour are not concluded they return to the Calendar, and they have no right other than that growing out of their position on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Arkansas is correct, as this bill was taken up in the morning hour.

I think the Senator in charge of the bill, as it is a matter which he knows to be of the greatest importance and some of us have had no time to consider it, had better let the bill go over, and then use his own discretion as to when he will move to take it up again. The Senate can be trusted with that. He can get the bill up when he moves to take it up, but I do not think the Senator will want to estop any Senators who desire to discuss the bill fully.

Mr. NELSON. Not at all.
Mr. HALE. Of course, he would not make progress with his bill by pursuing such a course. Therefore I suggest to the Senator that it go over now, and then the Senator can exercise his discretion in calling it up again.

Mr. NELSON. Very well. I have no disposition to make undue haste; I am quite willing to have the measure fully considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will retain its place on

Mr. NELSON. L Mr. HALE. Yes. Let it retain its place.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, January 13, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday was read and ap-

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Without objection, the following change of reference was made: House bill 4386, to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska," and for other purposes—from the Committee on the Territories to the Committee on Ways and Means.

LOT 1, SQUARE 1113, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up bill (H. R. 3740) to confirm title to lot 1, square 1113, in Washington, D. C. I desire first to submit a request to the House at this time. This is a bill that passed the House during the last session of Congress, and is to confirm the title to a certain piece of real estate in the District. It is on the Union Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman if the bill has been considered by the committee of which he is chairman, and if it is a unanimous report?

Mr. BABCOCK. It has been considered by the committee, it is a unanimous report, and passed the House at the last session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the bill as follows: Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to release and quitclaim to Johanna C. Block, her heirs and assigns forever, all the right, title, and interest, whether legal or equitable, of the United States of America in and to all that lot or parcel of ground situated in the city of Washington, D. C., and known on the ground plan of said city as lot No. 1, in square 1113, upon the payment by the said Johanna C. Block of such sum as the said Secretary of the Interior shall deem just and equitable: Provided, That the said Johanna C. Block pay to the proper officer of the District of Columbia all taxes heretofore assessed against said property, both general and special, now unpaid and standing against said property.

Mr. JENKINS. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

COLLECTION OF TAXES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up House bill 4372, to regulate the collection of taxes in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Dalzell). The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter, beginning with the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1902, the whole tax on real and personal property in the District of Columbia shall be payable in the month of May of each year: Provided, however, That on and after the 1st of November of each year the tax may be paid in two equal installments, the first in November and the second in May, but that no penalty shall accrue for delinquency until the following June, as hereinafter provided; or if the whole or any part of said tax upon real and personal property shall not be paid before the 1st day of June in each year the same shall thereafter be in arrears and delinquent, and there shall then be added, to be collected with said tax, a penalty of 1 per cent per month upon the amount thereof, and a like penalty on the first day of each succeeding month until payment of said tax and penalty, and the whole together shall constitute the delinquent tax, to be dealt with in the manner now provided by law.

SEC. 2. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, the only effect this bill has on the present law is to remove the penalty that commences to run on the 1st of November in each year. It provides that the taxes can be paid in two installments, and leaves it optional with the party who pays the taxes whether he will pay them on the 1st of November or after May 1 and before the 1st of June, when the penalty of 1 per cent, which is the present law, commences to run. It is recommended by the Commissioners, and I believe meets the approval of the business men of the District generally. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

EXECUTION OF DEEDS IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS AND PORTO RICO.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5814) to provide for the execution in the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico of deeds for lands situate in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That deeds for land situate in the District of Columbia may be acknowledged in the Philippine Islands and in Porto Rico before any notary public appointed therein by the civil or military governor thereof, commissioned as such by the President of the United States, with the like effect as if such deeds had been acknowledged in the District of Columbia before a notary public appointed for said District: Provided, That the certificate by such notary in the Philippine Islands or in Porto Rico, as the case may be, shall be accompanied by the certificate of the governor aforesaid to the effect that the notary taking said acknowledgment was in fact the officer he purported to be; and all deeds heretofore acknowledged and certified in the manner above specified when recorded among the land records of said District shall have the same effect as if such deeds had been executed, acknowledged, and recorded according to law, except as to rights hostile to the grantees in such deeds acquired by deeds recorded in said District before the passage of this act.

With the following a more deeds had been except as the case of this act.

With the following amendment recommended by the com-

Strike out, after the word "be," in line 14, the semicolon and insert in lieu thereof a period; also strike out all after the word "be," in said line, down to and including the word "act," in line 6 on page 2.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin as to why this bill applies to the District of Columbia and not to the States in general?

Mr. JENKINS. Because Congress has no power to pass a law with reference to the States. It is limited to the District of Columbia because it affects conveyances of land in the District of

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Why should it not be made broad enough

Mr. JENKINS. Other Territories?
Mr. JENKINS. Other Territories have provided for it.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. Arizona, Oklahoma, Indian Territory?
Mr. JENKINS. It was the intention of the committee to make it apply only to land in the District of Columbia, allowing the Territorial legislatures, which have ample power, to exercise it

if they choos

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if his bill is broad enough to cover really what he intends and proposes to cover? It says that these acknowledgments shall be made before notaries appointed by the President of the United States. Now, as a matter of fact, a great many of these notaries in the Philippine Islands are appointed by the governor of the islands. I would suggest to him if it would not be better to so amend the bill as to make it read "by the President of the United States or the governor of the Philippine Islands." dent of the United States or the governor of the Philippine Islands."

Mr. JENKINS. That is exactly what the bill provides.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I did not so understand it by reading the bill. I did not hear the Clerk distinctly.
Let us see how the bill reads:

That deeds for land situate in the District of Columbia may be acknowledged in the Philippine Islands and in Porto Rico before any notary public appointed therein by the civil or military governor thereof commissioned as such by the President of the United States.

I see now that the bill means notaries appointed by the governors of these respective islands.

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I wanted to have that clearly understood.

Mr. JENKINS. I ask for a vote

Mr. FITZGERALD. I should like to know why this bill is restricted to deeds. Why not include all instruments affecting real estate? Suppose the owner of property located in the Philippine Islands wishes to execute a mortgage or release, does the gentleman believe that the language of the bill covers such instruments?

Mr. JENKINS. I can only say to the gentleman that all the Mr. JENKINS. I can only say to the gentleman that all the parties interested in this matter have agreed upon the bill in its present form; it has not been suggested that it be made any broader than to include deeds, and it is not at all likely that any other instrument will be affected by it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call the gentleman's attention to the report of his own committee, which cites a letter of the president of this trust company, writing to the gentleman from Wisconsin, I believe, and calling his attention to the fact that there are certain trustees in the Philippine Islands who wish to execute a release. Mr. JENKINS.

release.

Mr. JENKINS. That is included in the word "deed."

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman of course understands that conveyancers are very particular in construing language of this kind; and the word "deed" used in this case probably would not be construed to cover a release of certain kinds.

Mr. JENKINS. The committee differs with the gentleman from New York, and so do the gentlemen who are particularly interested in this question. They think the word "deed" sufficient.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest that the bill be amended so as to

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest that the bill be amended so as to say "deeds or other instruments affecting real estate."

Mr. BABCOCK. These officers will be, in fact, commissioners of deeds acting in the Philippine Islands for the District of Columbia and will have the same powers as commissioners of deeds in this District for any State of the Union. At present there is no means provided by which a conveyance of the kind referred to may be executed. A commissioner of deeds can acknowledge a trust deed or a release. This bill is supposed by the bar and by the committee to cover fully all that is necessary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that while commissioners of deeds may have certain powers, this bill refers merely to "deeds for land." Now there may be a mortgage, there may be a release of dower rights, there are a number of different instruments that may affect real estate which would not be covered by the language of this bill.

estate which would not be covered by the language of this bill. I suggest to the gentleman an amendment which would include all amendments affecting real estate in the District of Columbia.

Mr. JENKINS. I ask for a vote.

The question being taken on the amendment reported by the committee, it was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move to amend by inserting in line 3

the words "and other instruments affecting.

Mr. JENKINS. I want to suggest that if the gentleman's amendment is to be adopted the word "for" in the bill should be stricken out. But the bill in its present form satisfies all the people interested in the question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not believe that in adopting legislation of this kind we should have in view only certain persons interested in a particular case. I think the bill should be broad enough to cover the interests of any persons whose interests may be involved in the measure in question.

Mr. JENKINS. We have no objection to the amendment, but if it is to be adopted the word "for" now in the bill should be stricken out.

Mr. PRINCE. Allow me to ask whether there is any provision in this bill which would be applicable to a soldier in the Philip-pines who may have real estate in the State of Illinois which he may wish to convey?

Mr. JENKINS. None whatever. Congress can not legislate on that question. That is a question for the State of Illinois.

Mr. PRINCE. Then each State will have to pass special legislation covering matters of this kind? Mr. JENKINS. Certainly.

Mr. PRINCE. And the legislatures of the Territories will have

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly.
Mr. FITZGERALD. I agree to the modification of my amendment as suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin.
Mr. PAYNE. I ask that the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3 strike out "for" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and other instruments affecting;" so as to read "deeds and other instruments affecting lands situate," etc.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does this bill create any new

Mr. JENKINS. If my friend will read the bill he will discover that it does not.

The amendment of Mr. FITZGERALD was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed. On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

TING FOR THE COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolu-

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, before a vote is taken, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin whether the request is in the usual form and comes within the limitation usually provided for printing done by committees? In other words, I would like to ask him whether this limits the amount of the appropriation?

Mr. BABCOCK. I will state to the gentleman from Alabama that this is the shortest form used in the House for authorizing done for the committees of the House. I the necessary printing done for the committees of the House. I wish to say to the gentleman, and for the benefit of the House, that there are several important matters which will necessarily come before the committee in the near future, and with reference to which it is absolutely necessary that the committee should have all of the information attainable. There are four or five important provisions that are coming before the committee shortly upon which the House will need detailed information. One is the question of the taxation of personal property of the District. Another relates to the amendments to the code of the District of Columbia. Another has reference to the change and consolida-tion of the two depots which will be of a great deal of importance, and with reference to which members will desire full information. There are also one or two other matters which should be printed for the benefit of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin this question: My understanding is that the usual limitaconsist this question: My understanding is that the usual initiation put upon committees in this regard authorizes an expenditure of $500. Does this resolution in the form in which it is presented follow that rule and limit the appropriation, or the expenditure which may be made under the resolution, to that sum?

Mr. BABCOCK. I understand from the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee that the limitation to which the gentleman refers applies to all resolutions of this character.

Mr. PAYNE. I so understand it, Mr. Speaker. This is in the usual form, and we have always been met in the Committee on Ways and Means by such a limitation as the gentleman refers to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then the gentleman from Wisconsin understands that this limits the appropriation to the expenditure of $500.

Mr. BABCOCK. I so understand it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Very well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.
Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the District of Columbia have no further business to present.

PENSIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the consideration of House bill 8581, making appropriation for the payment of invalid and other pensions for the year priation for the payment of invalid and other pensions for the year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes.

And pending that, I desire to inquire of gentlemen on the other side of the House whether we can not come to some understanding as to the limitation of debate upon the bill?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that there is likely to be very much discussion of the bill. I have myself had very few requests for time. But I think it better to let the matter go on for a time and we will then be able to under self had very few requests for time. But I think it better to let the matter go on for a time and we will then be able to understand what arrangement can be made with reference to closing the general debate. I think time will be saved by adopting that course, that is, to allow the debate to proceed in the regular way; and I suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill that that course be adopted.

Mr. BARNEY. Like the gentleman from Alabama, I have myself received but few requests from this side. We will then not undertake to make an agreement at this time, but let the debate proceed for a while.

bate proceed for a while.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I repeat, I have received but few requests for time, and agree fully with the gentleman as to the course of procedure.

The motion of Mr. BARNEY was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. Lacey in the chair. The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the general pension appropriation bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BARNEY. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the fill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Chairman, this bill carries an appropriation of $139,842,230, or something like five and one-half million dollars less than the pension appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1901. This difference, however, is not owing to any decrease in the pension list, because, while we appropriated something over $145,000,000 for the fiscal year 1901, there was a surplus left of something like five and one-half million dollars; so that the actual expenditures for the payment of pensions and for the expenses incident to the work were something over $139,000,000.
The pension roll is larger numerically now than it ever was before, but at the same time the annual value of the pension list before, but at the same time the annual value of the pension list is about the same and has remained about the same for the last

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentle-man one question. What is the largest amount that was ever ex-man one question. What is the largest amount that was ever expended on pensions in one year?

Mr. BARNEY. I think the report shows that. It was for the fiscal year 1893, I believe, when it was $156,906,000.

Mr. CLARK. Is the amount that is actually used up in paying pensions gradually diminishing every year now, or not?

Mr. BARNEY. Well, the Pension Commissioner in his report says that the pension list has reached its high-water mark—that is that the number upon the pension roll is larger to-day than it is, that the pension his has reached its high-water mark—that is, that the number upon the pension roll is larger to-day than it ever was before. However, the value of the pension list has diminished. That arises from the fact that arrearages are gradually decreasing from year to year. While the number upon the pension roll remains about the same and the amount actually paid for accrued pensions is about the same, at the same time the arrearages allowed upon pensions granted are gradually diminishing, so that the amount actually paid out is less than it has been heretofore.

The number on the pension roll at the present time is 997,735

This is the largest number that was ever upon the pen-Of these, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, somesion roll. thing over 4,000 were pensioners whose pensions arose out of the

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. We can not hear one word of the debate upon this bill. which appropriates millions and millions of dollars, and we should like to have it quiet.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is well taken. The committee will be in order.

Mr. BARNEY. I might add, for the information of the committee, that out of about $138,000,000 paid on account of pensions for the fiscal year 1901 the sum of $1,175,225 was paid on account of pensions growing out of the Spanish war.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to ask one more question, if it will

Mr. CLARK. I should have a set one more question, it is will not interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. BARNEY. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. Have you ever turned your attention to the question as to whether these roving pension agents that go around over the country save the Government enough money by cutting off pensions to pay their salaries and expenses?

Mr. BARNEY. Do you mean what are called "pension examiners?"

Mr. CLARK. Yes. They raise a good deal of disturbance, and I want to know whether they do any good or not.

Mr. BARNEY. Of course, that question does not properly come under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. It comes more properly under the jurisdiction of the Invalid Pensions Committee. We do not entering the property of the committee of the Invalid Pensions Committee. We do not enter into any investigation of that sions Committee. subject.

Mr. CLARK. I know that; but do you know, as a matter of fact, whether they do save the Government enough to pay their salaries and expenses or not?

Mr. BARNEY. My personal experience is that they do a good deal of hustling and examine a great many witnesses.

Mr. CLARK. Yes, I know; that is just exactly it.

Mr. BARNEY. And they make a good deal of trouble for members of this House.

Mr. CLARK. And a good deal of trouble for other people, too. Mr. PAYNE. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Is it not a fact that these examiners throughout the country greatly aid persons in applying for pensions and assist applicants in getting their proof?

Mr. BARNEY. I think they often do, and, as I understand it, that is one of the great objects of the work they have to perform.

Mr. PAYNE. And that they add more to the pension roll and to the pension payments than they take away by reason of find-ing dishonest claimants.

Mr. BARNEY. My experience is, and that is doubtless true, that on account of the work of these pension examiners a great many pensions have been allowed that otherwise would not have been allowed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That was the original theory that prompted their appointment. But is it not true that the present special agents sent out to make investigations are sent out as special agents. cial detectives, or are so esteemed by members of this House and others?

Mr. BARNEY. Well, I do not know in what way they are considered by the members of this House. I understand the real object is to get the facts.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is not their policy to defeat the pension claims of those whose pensions they investigate in a kind of detective service?

Mr. BARNEY. I know that has been charged against many of them, and perhaps sometimes with good reason; but so far as my personal experience is concerned I do not think it is generally true

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does not the gentleman's bill provide the appropriation, and does not it have jurisdiction over

Mr. BARNEY. We have no jurisdiction over the appropriation for pension examiners. We only have jurisdiction for making the appropriation for the payment of pensions, for the payment of medical examiners, and for the payment for the offices of the agencies and the hire of their clerks.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to ask the distinguished gentleman if he will, if convenient, give us the number of applications on account of services in the Spanish-American war, and of the number that have been granted pensions who have war, and of the hunder that have applied?

Mr. BARNEY. I can only speak authoritatively up to the close of the fiscal year 1901. Up to that time there had been 45,536 applications for pensions growing out of the Spanish war. For the fiscal year 1901, 14,648 applications were made, and up to the close of the fiscal year 1901, 5,604 pensions had been allowed on account of the Spanish war.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Ten per cent. Mr. BARNEY. I may add that the examination of the Pension Commissioner shows that since that time a sufficient number of applications have been filed to make something like 50,000 in the aggregate, which he thinks would be about 20 per cent of all the men who were engaged in the Spanish war.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And about 10 per cent have been

Mr. BARNEY. I think that would be about 10 per cent.
Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. As there seems to be some delay attending the granting of pensions in the Pension Department, has the appropriation the House is now asked to make anything to do with remedying this delay?
Mr. BARNEY. Not at all. That is not within our jurisdiction.

We have nothing to do with the payment of the clerks and tion. We have nothing to do with the payment of the clerks and the number of clerks in the force here in Washington at all.

Mr. CLARK. If the gentleman will permit me to ask him another question. When you say there have been 50,000 applications for pensions growing out of the Spanish war, does that include simply those who served prior to the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain, or does it include those who have served in this quasi state of peace over in the Philippines since the ratification of the treaty of peace?

Mr. BARNEY. It takes in, as I understand it, all who have served in the Army since the outbreaking of the Spanish war.

Mr. CLARK. Including the Philippines?

Mr. CLARK. Including the Philippines?
Mr. BARNEY. All that have served in the United States Army, either in the Philippines, Porto Rico, or Cuba.
Mr. CLARK. You do not know how many actually served in the Spanish war and how many in this state of peace over in the Philippines?

Mr. BARNEY. I do not.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman inform me how much money is represented by the pensions allowed those who have been pensioned on account of our Spanish-American

Mr. BARNEY. I stated that once before. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I did not hear the gentleman's

Mr. BARNEY. For the fiscal year 1901 we paid out for pensions on account of the Spanish war $1,175,225.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, that represents how many pensions?

Mr. BARNEY. That represents 5,604 pensions.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many applications have there been made on account of service in the Spanish war?

Mr. BARNEY. The applications altogether up to the close of the fiscal year 1901 were 45,536.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, just another question disassociated with this. I want to know why only $8 or $12 is allowed to Mexican soldiers and so much more is allowed to soldiers who were connected with the war between the States.

Mr. BARNEY. I will state to the gentleman that that is a prepare question to selt this House when we have our pension bills.

proper question to ask this House when we have our pension bills under consideration. These pensions are all granted according to laws enacted by Congress. We are now in this bill only making appropriations for the payment of pensions which are already provided for by law. The Appropriations Committee has nothing to do with general legislation upon the pension question, but only has jurisdiction to provide for the payment of pensions under existing law. Any change in the law regarding the granting of pensions must be worked out through the Invalid Pensions Committee and original legislation of Congress. mittee and original legislation of Congress.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What is the highest pension that is paid by this bill?

Mr. BARNEY. Oh, I do not know that. This is for the payment of all the pensions, both large and small.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are there pensions as high as $50

Mr. BARNEY. I presume so; $72, I think, is the limit for total disability. This is a bill to pay all the pensioners on the pension roll.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. As a matter of law, the Mexican soldier who survives—and there is but a handful of them, and they are out of Congress—are paid from $8 to $12 a month. I want to know if the gentleman from Wisconsin indorses that radical distinction. If so, he will give his reasons for it.

Mr. HULL. Let me ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if the pension for the Mexican soldier and the soldier of the civil war does not stand on the same plane?

Mr. BARNEY. I always understood so.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I know that the Mexican soldier

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I know that the Mexican soldier is not paid over $8 to $12 a month.

Mr. HULL. That is a service pension, regardless of disability.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They are old soldiers who went to the Mexican war, carried the flag there and brought it back; and yet they are paid this poor little pittance of $8 to $12 a month, yet they are paid this poor little pittance of $8 to $12 a month, while some of them are absolutely in a state of penury.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to yield to the gentleman from Tennessee for a question, but not for a speech on Mexican war pensions, as that is not germane to this bill.

Now, the estimate for the fiscal year 1903 is made upon what the Commissioner says was paid out for the first half of the fiscal year of 1902, which was $68,513,380. But the Commissioner informs us that they always pay out more the last half of the fiscal year than they do the first half, because of the fact that the pension clerks get their leave of absence through July August and September, so that more work is done the last half of the fiscal year than for the first half. He thus estimates $138,500,000 to be sufficient to pay the pensions for the fiscal year of 1903, upon the basis of $68,513,380 for the first half of the fiscal year, as stated, and this is probably as nearly correct as can be estimated.

There is one other change in the bill, and that is the amount paid for the board of medical examiners. This year we appropaid for the board of medical examiners. This year we appropriate $800,000 instead of $700,000, which has been the amount we have appropriated annually for many years past. The Commissioner tells us, and we know it to be true in the Appropriations Committee, that they are asking for a deficiency this year of something like $200,000 for the purpose of paying the medical examiners for the fiscal year 1901, but he thinks that if we give him $800,000 for 1903 it will be sufficient for that purpose.

Now, then, unless some further questions are to be asked, I will yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. BARNEY. Certainly.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand this bill shows a reduction of nearly $6,000,000 in the amount appropriated for pensions next year as compared with the present fiscal year.

Mr. BARNEY. About five and one-half millions.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. At the same time, I understand the gentleman to say, or the report of the Commissioner to say, that there has been an increase of pensioners on the roll. I want to ask if there has been any reduction in the Pension Office want to ask it there has been any reduction in the Pension Office as to amounts granted for pensions.

Mr. BARNEY. That grows out of this, that the amount paid to pensioners, on an average, is decreasing; that is, the large pensions, for those who are getting from fifty to seventy-two dollars a month, are decreasing in number. These pensioners are getting old, and because of the very reasons for which they draw these large pensions they are passing away faster than the men who get smaller pensions, so that those who are getting the large pensions on the pension roll are diminishing, on an average, faster than the others. Thus, while the number of pensioners is increasing the annual value of the pension roll is not increasing.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. So that the amount in this bill is not to be obtained to appropriate the pension roll.

bill is not to be attributed to any decrease of the pension roll-that is, relatively?

Mr. BARNEY. I do not quite understand the question. reduction is on account of two reasons: First, a decrease of arrearages, which I explained a little while ago—that is, diminishing from year to year; and, second, those who are receiving large pensions are passing off more rapidly than those who receive small

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman tell us if the reduction which is to be made is to be continued from year to year? In other words, are we on the down grade?

Mr. BARNEY. The Pension Commissioner tells us—and of course his judgment is far better than mine, and ought to be—he tells us that for a few years the amount will remain about the same, but that we have reached the high-water mark, and that it then will soon begin to diminish, unless new and more liberal pen-then will soon begin to diminish, unless new and more liberal pension legislation is enacted by Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin quite sure that $138,500,000 will leave us without a demand for a deficiency bill?

Mr. BARNEY. I feel quite positive, from my experience on the committee and from my examination of the Commissioner, that $138,500,000 will be sufficient to pay the pension roll for the fiscal year of 1903. year of 1903

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Has there been any deficiency this year?

Mr. BARNEY. No; we have a surplus of five and one-half million dollars to turn back into the Treasury. Now, if there are no further questions, I will yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. ROBÎNSON of Indiana. Just one moment, if the gentleman pleases. I understand him to say that there have been covered into the Treasury in the last year five and one-half million dollars which the House appropriated last year?

Mr. BARNEY. There will be at the proper time, as I understand. The appropriation runs for two years, and then it will be covered into the Treasury if not reappropriated in the meantime.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is there any new legislation proposed in this bill?

Mr. BARNEY. Not a single item. The bill is identical with the bill which we passed one year ago, except as to the amount of the appropriation.

Now, if there be no further questions, I will yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Bell], reserving the balance of my time.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the statement of the Pension Commissioner, we have now the unparalleled condition of 20 per cent of the men who served in the Volunteer Army during the Spanish war applying for pensions, when but a few were maimed by shot or shell. That officer, in his narration before the comby shot or shell. That officer, in his narration before the committee and in his report, has shown that these applications go largely by regiments. There are quite as many where they did not smell powder as where they did. The proportion is not greater from the Philippine Islands than from the camps down in Florida, where no gun was fired. He also shows that at the end of seven years after the war of the rebellion only 6 per cent of the soldiers of that great war, mangled as they were on hundreds of battlefields, had applied for pensions; yet, almost upon the very heels of the termination of the war with Spain, we have 20 per cent, or over 50,000 out of an army of 250,000, engaged for that war applying for pensions.

Now, there are some peculiar things about this matter. The Commissioner of Pensions shows that the reason this pension roll

Commissioner of Pensions shows that the reason this pension roll keeps up is the continued liberalization of the pension laws. other words, he shows that by reason of the very liberal pensions given by the Government and the liberal construction of the Pension Department the pension agents in California and other portions of the country where our Army was recently turned loose acted like a gang of wolves let loose upon those men, importuning them to apply for pensions and taking small fees for their services in applying for these pensions. He shows case after case where men when discharged were thoroughly examined and shown to have no ailment whatever—were shown to be in perfect health. have no ailment whatever—were shown to be in perfect health; yet at the end of a single week, upon the instigation of these pension agents, these very men came in and undertook to show by affidavit that they had every disease almost that the human race is heir to.

Now, it seems to me that if our friends want to do something for the men who really deserve pensions they ought to do some-thing to prevent such men who are hunting for fees from pension cases from having any status before the Pension Office. These cases from having any status before the Pension Office. These agents proselyte and make hypochondriacs out of many of these tired and weary soldiers as they return to their homes.

The Commissioner of Pensions is a very active man, a man of great energy, and I think he has been deceived so often, and the clerks in his office have been imposed on so many times by sharks and unworthy agents, that now it is almost impossible for a man to get a pension who really deserves it under the old law. The reason why the value of the pensions is decreasing to-day is because the old soldier, who, soon after the war, was too proud to apply for a pension—who put off an application as long as possible—now finds it practically impossible to get a pension under the old statutes. Therefore he must take a pension under the service-pension law, the highest pension of that kind being $12. Under circumstances of this kind the value of the pension roll will naturally decrease, while in numbers it may increase. urally decrease, while in numbers it may increase.

That is the condition at this time, and while I have great faith in the endeavor of the Pension Commissioner to protect this. Government, I do say the sentiment against allowing pensions with arrearages is so overwhelming in the Department that it is with arrearages is so overwhelming in the Department that it is practically impossible to get such an application through; and you can not get it through unless you have proof beyond a reasonable doubt. This is a flagrant injustice to the patriotic old soldier who put off his claim as long as possible.

The other day I received a letter from a physician in a Western State who wrote to me regarding a case in the Department. He stated to me that the applicant had a case so clear that if the many who caused the graphet regarding had been in siril life the world.

who caused the gunshot wound had been in civil life he would have been convicted of murder if there had not been a limit as to the time of death to a year and a day, etc.

The writer of this letter asked me to go up to the Pension Department and do two things; first, convince the Pension Office that a dead man can not make an affidavit; that was the first proposition, because, as this physician said, the officers had asked proposition, because, as this physician said, the officers had asked three times for the affidavit of a particular man and had three times been told that the man was dead. He asked me first to convince the Pension Department that the dead can not swear, and next he wanted me to look over the proof. I went over that proof. The case was that of a lieutenant of the Army, a robust young man, who had been wounded by a piece of bombshell near the spinal column. His captain stood behind him at the time the wound was inflicted, and the lieutenant was relieved from service. The captain makes an affidavit as clear as any you ever saw, saying that this young officer was at once relieved from duty and relieved from day to day afterwards. But he never went to the hospital. He said, "I will come out all right." He went through the war with that sore on his back. In 1881 he applied for a pension. The sore was still there. The captain swore pointpension. The sore was still there. The captain swore point-blank to the fact of the lieutenant having been wounded as stated, that he was relieved from service from time to time, but that he had no hospital record because he never went to the hospital. The examining board showed the wound. Here comes in a clerk of the Pension Office and says, "You must have the affidavit of the surgeon." The surgeon states, "I have no remembrance of this case; and it would be strange if I should remember such a case, in view of the great number of cases with which I had to deal."

He added, "I know that lieutenant so well that if he should tell me he had such a wound I would feel that I knew it to be true." The man who attended this soldier in his last sickness makes a statement coinciding in every particular with that of the captain, showing that there was a tumor in the man's back at the place described. He not only shows this, but that this wound killed him. When the case in that condition came to be passed upon, the office sent to the board of vital statistics in the city where the soldier died and the report of that city officer was that the man had died from chronic diarrhea and from dropsy-the very ailhad died from chronic diarrhea and from dropsy—the very all-ments that might be expected from a wound that near the spine. The Department says you must explain that discrepancy be-tween the captain, between the doctor who attended him from time to time until his death, and these vital statistics from the city where he died. Well, the result is that the man can not ex-plain the discrepancy. They give him a certain time in which to explain, and if he does not explain within that time, the name must be brocked off. In the days of administration of Commisexplain, and if he does not explain within that time, the name must be knocked off. In the days of administration of Commissioner Black he was knocked off the rolls because he did not explain it within the time given to him. Now his widow—his wife—comes, and the Commissioner says in response to her request, and I suppose he thinks there is reason in it, that we can not take up the cases of the man who preceded him in the administration of the office. He says he can not expected the decisions of the of the office. He says he can not overrule the decisions established by General Black in this new hearing for the benefit of the lished by General Black in this new hearing for the benefit of the widow. Result—a grievous wrong resulted to the soldier who gave his life for his country, and now a delicate feeling and a technical rule must stand between a supposed duty and justice. Now, Mr. Chairman, there are thousands of just such cases as this, and the greatest injustice has been done to the old soldier, as you will readily see—the man who went into the service with patriotism in his heart, who said, "I want to serve the country, if possible, without remuneration," while other men, not filled with such patriotic impulses, hurried to the pension agency, got their pensions immediately after the war closed, and the old fellow who put off the evil day as long as possible is now denied relief because he can not now prove his case beyond all reasonable doubt. doubt.

Mr. Chairman, we ought to give this man the benefit of every reasonable doubt. We can not do it by men standing here and elsewhere saying to the Pension Commissioner or to the Bureau, "Why don't you do this, or why don't you do this or that?" That is not the way to deal with the question. We should pass bills saying what shall be done and what shall not be done.

bills saying what shall be done and what shall not be done.

Now, another thing, Mr. Chairman: We all complain from year to year about the widow's pension. We say, "Why is it that the widow has got to be put off in her claims for two and three years after the death of the husband before you can get a widow's pension for her?" Now, the reason is the law as it stands requires her to make practically an impossible kind of proof. It requires the widow to show things that are utterly foolish and unreasonable, and it makes her proof almost impossible. Now, who is to blame for all of this? It is that class of men who have been trying to put impositions upon the pensioners and upon the Pension Office. put impositions upon the pensioners and upon the Pension Office, and which condition of affairs has forced Congress to pass laws that make it almost impossible for them to prove up. The worthy are made to suffer to escape the inroads of the unworthy.

Now, the head of the Bureau annually comes to us and appeals to us to change that law. He says the law ought to be that a woman who should be proved to be in good faith the common-law wife of the soldier, cohabiting and living with him many years in good faith, taken by the community as her husband, the children taking his name, and so on, should entitle her to the presumption of being his wife, and give her the benefit, under the law, of that position.

I propose to offer a bill to-morrow for the purpose of making that proof easier, And another thing, while it seems to me that every man on this floor ought to insist on being absolutely just to the old soldier in all the wars, including the last one, and in order to be just to the man who was really injured in that war, we have got to join the Pension Office in protecting it from the men who were not injured and who are unworthy of the consideration of the Government. The Commissioner of Pensions tells us, from time to time, that he has been unable to do his duty by us, from time to time, that he has been unable to do his duty by reason of the present condition of the law. He has told us some years ago, and from time to time heretofore, that he had 100 clerks in his office that were not worth $1 to him defining the allowance of pension claims. He has told us that he had employees there supposed to be looking after the pension claims that were worthless in every particular, and yet who were drawing for their service, or pretended service, $75 a month.

They were drawing that sum and, in addition, a pension, in some case, as high as $72 a month. What does that mean, Mr. Chairman? That means a double pension. The man was getting $72 a month which the Congress said he should have without labor, and he was getting $75 that the law gives him as a pretended laborer, but which is in reality another pension. I asked the Commissioner myself where he made the distinction between the $72 to be paid to these men as pensions under the law and the the $72 to be paid to these men as pensions under the law and the $75 for services in the Bureau. "Why," he responded, "there is no difference in reality." I asked, then, "Is that just to the old soldiers throughout the country? Is not this giving a few favored ones double pensions at the expense of the other worthy soldiers?" And I want to make another suggestion. At the end of the civil war, as I understand it, the highest pension paid was $8 a month. So there was not any great incentive at that time for pension agents and unworthy men to attempt to impose upon the Government. But as our country has become richer and as our soldiers have become older and more needy we have gradually increased those pensions. Now, that has been eminently proper. I believe in it; but at the same time we have had this pension business mixed up in a measure with politics, to the extent that we have not aided the Pension Department in an honest and just we have not aided the Pension Department in an honest and just execution of the pension laws, and now what is coming? Here are the new soldiers, 20 per cent of whom have already applied for pensions. A few days ago I had a letter from an old pensioner, who stated the three or four years he served in the war of the rebellion. He told me of his old age, his necessities, and the fact that he is drawing only $6 a month; but he says, "My nearest neighbor was a soldier in the recent war with Spain; he is an athlete, as strong a man as any in my city, and he is drawing $25 a month." No doubt but the new soldier deserved this pension. No doubt but that he was really disabled when it was granted. Now, what does that mean? What is it going to mean to you and to me and to the old soldiers of the country? It means that many of the soldiers returning from their service in the Spanish war were sick and afflicted; but in a certain time they begin, in our climate and under favorable conditions, to recuperate. By and by they will become well again. Now, unless the Pension Office keeps close track of them and keeps its examiners in the field, examining pensioners from year to year, you will soon have

Office keeps close track of them and keeps its examiners in the field, examining pensioners from year to year, you will soon have a line of robust men drawing large pensions all over the country, while the old soldiers, under the dependent pension act, disabled, bowed with age and infirmities, will be drawing only $12 a month; and as a result of it you will see disturbance and dissatisfaction all over the country. This country will never be contented with any unjust discrimination made against the old soldier that came home mangled and maimed in the most bloody war in modern times

The Pension Commissioner says that one reason why he has not allowed any more of these Spanish war pensions is that after these men returned and forty-five or fifty thousand of them applied for pensions they began to improve in health. These men were not shot; they were simply poisoned by malaria, and they have been getting better from day to day. The country expects and de-mands that Congress and the Pension Department shall be liberal and just with all of our soldiers.

The reason why the Commissioner of Pensions told us in a former Congress that he could not discharge 100 clerks who were absolutely worthless to the service and keeping the old pensioner out of his claim was that whenever he discharged one every member of Congress from the State from which that employee came and the two Senators from that State came and jumped upon the Commissioner and never allowed him any rest until the man was reinstated. That is unquestionably true, and it seems that Congress and the old soldiers in the country have never looked at this from the proper standpoint, which is that both the salary paid to one of these men who is beyond the power of efficient service and the pension that he draws combined make his total pension. One is as much a pension as the other. Thereby he gets two pensions, while the old soldier at home gets none, or a very small one. This political pull seems to be the curse of about everything about Washington, including the administration of the pension laws.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I believe Congress cut down the number of employees about 100, or something like that, three years ago, and it was then stated that that would add to the efficiency of the service. Has the gentleman from Colorado noticed that there has been any more expedition or facility in the grant that there has been any more expedition or facility in the granting of pensions since that time?

Mr. BELL. I am not an advocate of the present Pension Commissioner. I think in many cases he has been too strict, and especially against the old pensioner who did not apply until within the last few years. But on the question of economy, and on the question of insisting on every employee doing his full quota of work, and in searching out every conceivable indication of fraud, I want to say that the present Commissioner has, in my judgment, never been excelled in that high office.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman from Colorado allow me?

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman from Colorado allow me?

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman from Colorado allow me?
Mr. BELL. Yes.
Mr. NORTON. I understand you to say that you believe the Commissioner is too strict as against the old soldier?
Mr. BELL. Yes, I do, in some cases.
Mr. NORTON. Is not the law now existing too strict?
Mr. BELL. It is utterly foolish, in some particulars. It seeks known impossibilities.
Mr. NORTON. You say the law is utterly foolish?
Mr. BELL. In a great many particulars; and we are largely

Mr. BELL. In a great many particulars; and we are largely to blame for it.

Mr. NORTON. I am glad to know that you will join in some bill correcting that.

Mr. BELL. I am in favor of liberalizing wherever justice and common sense dictates, and that is in many places.

Mr. NORTON. All right.

Mr. BELL. But I think we do not assist the Pension Com-missioner in the meritorious cases, and also, we do not stand behind him in cases that are not meritorious, as we should. We are prone to criticise rather than to aid in overcoming the defects.

Mr. NORTON. Are you in favor of the Commissioner making

Mr. NORTON. Are you in lavor of the Commissioner making rules to govern his office entirely outside of law?
Mr. BELL. No, sir.
Mr. NORTON. Is he not doing that?
Mr. BELL. I think some of his constructions are unquestion-

Mr. Belle. I think some of his constructions are unquestionably outside of the original intentions of the lawmakers.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do you not think the Commissioner has the right to make a reasonable rule for the government of his office in determining these claims?

Mr. BELL. Oh, yes. Here is the trouble with the Commissioner. The Commissioner has been imposed on from so many quarters. The clerks have been imposed upon in that Department by environs officiarits from so many sources, that they do ment by spurious affidavits from so many sources that they do not feel that they are safe in trusting anybody, and that affects the good as well as the bad. That is the difficulty. The deserving are suffering for the venality of the undeserving.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Will the gentleman permit me a question?
Mr. BELL. Certainly.
Mr. SULLOWAY. As the gentleman states there is such a terrible condition existing down there in the filing of false testimony and numerous attempts to impose upon the office by false evidence, I would like him to state how many cases has this Commissioner, who is so industrious in that direction, and who is how many cases has he discovered or reported? The gentleman will remember there are nearly a million on the rolls. How many applications of that kind will the gentleman tell us there are? Let us know how rotten this affair is.

Mr. BELL. The Commissioner tells us exactly, and I can give it to you in a moment from his report.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Oh, offhand. Mr. BELL. It runs up into a large number. Mr. SULLOWAY. How large?

Mr. BELL. I am not going to guess at this when I can give you the exact number by turning to it.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Is it twenty-five?

Mr. NORTON. It is not twenty-five.

Mr. BELL. All kinds of fraud are set forth. Numerous men

Mr. BELL. All kinds of fraud are set forth. Numerous men have been drawing the pensions of others who have died, and there have been any number of pension attorneys that have been disbarred from practice before the Department for filing fraudulent evidence, and everything else that is now militating against the interests of the worthy old soldier.

Mr. TALBERT. If the gentleman will turn to page 105 of the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, he will find a large list of frauds given.

of frauds given.
Mr. BELL. Yes. I will append the report of the Commissioner here so all can see.

CRIMINAL DATA.

At the close of the fiscal year 230 cases were pending in the hands of United States attorneys, in which evidence had been secured showing violations of law. The reports received during the year show that 250 indictments were brought to trial, resulting in 236 convictions and 24 acquittals. In 25 cases a nolle prosequi was entered. One hundred and thirty-eight persons were sentenced. Sentence was suspended in the cases of 17 persons convicted, and the action of the court in the cases of 4 others convicted has not been reported. During the year 191 persons were arrested, and 300 indictments were reported found.

Of the 25 indictments dismissed on nolle prosequi the causes assigned are as follows:
Lapse of time since proceedings were instituted 5 Old age and feebleness of defendant 4
Convicted in another case 5 Offense committed in another district 1
Death of principal witness for Government 1 Failure of grand jury to indict principal offender 2
Evidence not sufficient 2 Consideration for defendant's family 1 Inability to locate defendant 1
Inability to locate defendant

The 226 indictments tried, which resulted in convictions, were based upon the following charges:
False claim 64 False certification 26
False affidavit 16 False personation 5
Perjury 40 Forgery 18
Illegal fee
Personating Government officer 21 Retaining pension certificate 2
Prosecuting claims while a Government officer 4 Conspiracy 2 Embezzlement 1 Attempted bribery 1
Assempted bilbery

Attempted bribery.

It has been the uniform practice not to recommend prosecution in any case unless the criminal intent of the parties was clearly shown, and in the cases of soldiers and their dependents, to resolve every doubt in their favor, and not to recommend prosecution where it was apparent that they had been drawn into a violation of the law by others. As a result of this practice, the majority of the convictions secured were against attorneys, agents, subagents, magistrates, and others responsible for the preparation and filing of false and fraudulent claims and evidence, and those who falsely personated soldiers or soldiers' widows.

In view of the fact that the Bureau had obtained evidence in many pending claims showing that grossly irregular and improper practices were resorted to by certain persons engaged in the prosecution of pension claims at and around Newbern, N. C., an investigation was undertaken at the beginning of the fiscal year of the cases of some of the 37 army and navy pensioners residing in Craven and Jones counties, N. C. In the course of the examination it became necessary to investigate 22 pending original claims, in addition to the pending claims for reissue, increase, and additional pension filed by the pensioners. This work was completed in December, but 10 of the cases are still under investigation, the names of 38 illegal pensioners were dropped from the rolls and 24 pending claims were rejected upon the ground that they were fraudulent. In addition to the above there were 10 cases in which irregularities and forgeries were discovered, but in which no action was taken in view of the fact that it was shown that the pensioners were, nevertheless, entitled to the pensions received by them.

Six indictments were found against persons believed to be guilty of deliberate violations of the law, 3 for forgery, 1 for false impersonation of a soldier, 1 for an illegal receipt of pension by a remarried widow, and 1 for perjury committed before a special examiner. The first 5 cases resu

ATTORNEYS.

During the year 288 attorneys have been disqualified for the following reasons: Disbarment, 37; suspensions, 6; dropping for cause, 7; dropping at request, 2; prohibition under section 5498, Revised Statutes, 29, and death, 207.

Now, I do not want it understood that I am charging the Commissioner with being the best or the worst we have ever had. What I am trying to do is to take my part of the responsi-bility for the unjust condition of the pension records of this country. I notice we are all quite free to criticise, but slow to country. I notice we are all quite free to criticise, but slow to remedy, the evil.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Colorado, as I know he is taking great interest in the matter, and has a bill that he is going to present or has presented, what remedy would he suggest to strengthen the arm of the Pension Commissioner in detecting and ferreting but these frauds that he states exists when he states the same out these frauds that he states exists, when he states the same Commissioner has asked three times for the statement of a man who is dead, his constituent, as he has detailed to the House.

Mr. BELL. The difficulty is that whenever we have a bill in this House we all jump on the Commissioner and the Pension Department, when at least half the responsibility rests upon Congress itself. We could better spend some of our time in finding a remedy. Now, these frauds can not be avoided altogether. The machine is too large and the temptation too great. But here is the difficulty. That men because they think that it is But here is the difficulty: That men, because they think that it is popular, as it seems to me, come in here, assume to represent the Grand Army, and from other places, and hoot at the idea that there are frauds in the applications for and in the allowance of pensions. Now, there is no such field presented in America for the original dispensed and the Design Company. the evil disposed as at the Pension Office, and that comes largely from the tender sentiment of the country—first, for the old soldier, and, secondly, from many men who are every day in year catering to the old soldier and trying to make him think that he is his friend in and out of season instead of standing up and aiding the Commissioner and others in weeding out the unjust and giving greater protection to the really meritorious soldier.

What I was particularly trying to refer to was, I was hoping that we would not get into the same condition with the volunteers of the late war, that we might limit the privileges of the proselyting agent. Pensions are so liberal at this time that we may expect to be loaded down with this pension roll for time immemorial unless it is cautiously limited to deserving ones, because, as said by the Pension Commissioner, out of forty-five or fifty thousand applying under the Spanish war claims so many have improved in health that but few have been allowed. These men were not shot. They were simply exposed to hardship and poison. Being young and robust, many of them will recover or not materially feel the bad effects again until they begin to age. Then the Government will have to deal liberally with them.

The Pension Commissioner is bearing a great responsibility. He has shown great nerve; he is showing great industry, and he has shown great executive ability in that office. There is no doubt but that he is master of the office, and he should not be charged for things of which he is not guilty, and should be aided where he deserves aid.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?
Mr. BELL. Yes; certainly.
Mr. SIMS. Is it not a fact that as time wears on, and the objects and purposes of the Commissioner are better understood, there is less outcry and criticism of his acts?

Mr. BELL. I think so. Another thing; we do not aid the Commissioner. He comes here from year to year and, with his experience, suggests to us what he wants, and we pay no attention to it. We do not even read his report. Now, we are appropriating this year $800,000, or $900,000 I think it is, for the examining boards. Eight hundred thousand dollars; just think of it. The Commissioner for five or six years has reported to us the condition of the examiners. He has shown us that certain boards have examined as high as 40 and 50 cases consecutively and given the same disease and the same conditions in nine-tenths of the cases. He has taken the same man and gone before four boards in one day, and those four boards would give the man from nothing to the highest pension, and no two of them would rate him alike or attribute the same diseases to him.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman from Colorado allow me a suggestion?

Mr. BELL. Certainly.
Mr. BINGHAM. I think the gentleman made the statement that we are appropriating $900,000 for the examining boards. I think he will find upon examination that it is $800,000, an increase of $100,000 over last year.

Mr. BELL. I am obliged to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Now, what the Pension Commissioner desires is this. He says that these boards, scattered all over the country, report to him the condition of the soldier and what he ought to have. He says that they are guided by so many different rules that they can not, in the Pension Office, take these ratings at all. They have to sweep them to one side and judge by the description of the disease what the rating should be.

Now, the Commissioner says if they will allow him to organize a certain number of boards with a stenographer, and with an ata certain number of boards with a stenographer, and with an attorney—and he fixes the prices—and go from point to point and examine these soldiers all upon the same principle, then he will do the work in the field. He will get a service that will be infinitely cheaper and will do justice to the soldier; but he says he never can do it under this system of the board of pensions. This is his contention. He persists in the view that there is no consistency in the reports of the present boards.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. BELL. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. I have found the Commissioner to be often criticised by individuals in this way: They go before the medical board and the board will tell them that they are entitled to $20 or $30 a month, but after it goes to the Pension Office they only get

$30 a month, but after it goes to the Pension Office they only get $10 or $12, and then they write me and say that they have been outraged by the Commissioner at Washington. They do not understand it, and the Commissioner gets a great deal of unjust criticism. It is because these individuals have been before the board and the board told them that they ought to get more than board and the board told them that they ought to get more than they really should.

Mr. BELL. The Commissioner states that this old law was that they must give the man's injury in eighteenths, and they would give his inability; and so it used to be a common thing for them to have a man that had inabilities or deficiencies running up to twenty-five or twenty-six eighteenths. They not only had him totally disabled, but doubly totally disabled. Under the law of 1890, with a maximum rate of $12, the boards often gave much higher ratings than the law allowed. So the Commissioner had to change that, and now the boards make the rating in dollars under the act of 1890. This testimony before us is that they paid no attention to the rating of the local physician; that they paid no attention to the rating of the local physician; that what they are compelled to do is to make the local physician describe the disease in every case, and let the medical board here judge of the disability. He says otherwise they can not have any consistency or equality among the soldiers.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BELL. Certainly.

Mr. SULLOWAY. In other words, he assumes that a surgeon who perhaps has known the man for thirty or fifty years on the board, has seen him almost daily perhaps, treating him during these years, that this surgeon, after seeing him and examining him specifically with the eye and with the hand, is not so competent as some gentleman that they have in the office here at Washington who has never laid eyes on him. Is that it?

Mr. BELL. No; his theory is that the ordinary board does not have enough business and responsibility, and does not get down into the duties of the office sufficiently to make the examination and report as they are instructed by the Department here. In other words, the Commissioner says that he found it absolutely impossible to take those ratings; that if he should do so there would be no uniformity in the pensions; that no two boards agree in their findings. Therefore he asks to have organized educated boards, who will be governed by the same rules and make consistent reports.

I do not doubt that the conclusion of a surgeon reached after an examination of the case ought to have great influence if he understands his duties. But the Commissioner insists that the experiment has proved a failure; that men have been put through ten or twelve examinations, sometimes as many as four in one day, and the boards differed so widely in their conclusions that he found it impossible to base any action on their reports.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Is it not true that many of the physicians here in the Department who act upon these cases are men without actual experience as surgeons or physicians?

Mr. BELL. I could not say; I do not know; but I have heard criticism.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I think the Commissioner made that statement in a previous report. That being so, does it not follow that in accepting the reports of such officers the Department gives more credence to the statements of young and inexperienced men than to the findings of carefully selected surgeons who have had the applicants before them?

Mr. BELL. I understand that the Commissioner has stated several times—not in the recent hearing or report—that the office does not pay any attention to the rating of the local board; and he gives the excuse that he has found it impossible to do so. Therefore he has tried every year since he has been in office, I believe with the single exception of the present year, to have that law repealed.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Barney] and myself as members of the conference committee prevented that law from being repealed. I believe that every member of the conference committee except the gentleman from Wisconsin and myself was in favor of the repeal on hearing the reasons of the Pension Commissioner. But we thought that as these men were experts, and as they had seen and examined the applicants, their opinions even in a court of law would be good and should have credence. But now the Commissioner proposes to organize a force and put them on the same basis. In our arguments with him he invariably contended that boards could not be obtained whose members would educate themselves sufficiently to ever understand their duties; that there was no harmony among these boards in their ratings; that no two would make the same rating, and thus there arose dissatisfaction and complaint among the old soldiers.

I would like to see our pension laws amended in several particulars. There is one provision, for instance, which I know is somewhat unpopular with the old soldiers. It refers to cases of men who, in order to escape from Southern prisons and thereby save their lives, enlisted in the Southern army. The Pension Office has held that these men could not be pensioned at all under the act of 1890. There is a provision of our pension laws which the Pension Department has asked to have repealed, to the effect that when a soldier of the Union Army, rather than starve or die in a Southern prison has entered the Southern army with the in-tention of escaping at first opportunity and that they did not fight against this Government, but escaped, such a soldier or his widow can not be pensioned.

That recommendation for the repeal of that law is not in this report, but, I understand, was in a former report. I had a letter the other day from a man telling me that he enlisted in a company belonging to the Southern army, with a great crowd of other men, with no other object than to escape death, almost immediate death; that on the first opportunity they did escape, and that Grant put them to guarding his headquarters. General Grant thought enough of them to trust them in that way. This man said that both Grant and Logan congratulated them and said that they wished that all the prisoners of Libby Prison had done likewise. Yet that man can not get a pension. Some men say that under such circumstances the soldier should have died in prison rather than enter the Southern army.

We think it unreasonable to say that those young men, many of them mere boys, who had not been trained as soldiers, should have stayed in prison, with death staring them in the face, rather than join some command of the enemy with the view of deserting and getting back to their own regiments. It is going too far to say that these men are to be forever disgraced and must die without reinstatement to the honors of the roll.

Mr. McCLEARY. Is there any proposition to cover cases where men in the stress of circumstances entered the Confederate army, although they were not in harmony with the purposes for which that army was fighting, and who at the first opportunity escaped from that army and joined the Union Army?

Mr. BELL. No; such persons can not obtain pensions at all, Another thing; the Commissioner says that in Mr. Lincoln's second commissioner politics had more or less come into the armies.

second campaign politics had, more or less, come into the armies, and that a great many men who had been fighting for the South believed so implicitly in Mr. Lincoln that they deserted the Southern army and went over to the Northern Army. Yet such men can not be pensioned.

Mr. McCLEARY. Does not the gentleman think that some wisely guarded provision ought to be adopted whereby pensions can be granted in such cases?

Mr. BELL. I certainly do. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Bell] is mistaken in the statement he has just made. As I understand, there is a provision of law under which persons who left the Southern army and went into the Federal Army

Mr. CLARK. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You will find that such is the law.

Mr. CLARK. I have knowledge of the case of one of my neighbors who left the Confederate army and enlisted in the Union Army, and who drew pension for four or five years as a soldier of the Union Army; but after he had drawn pension for some years some contemptible fellow informed upon him and his pension was cut off, and I have never been able to get it restored.

Mr. SIMS. I have one or two neighbors in the same fix.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Very well; if you think I am wrong in this matter I think I shall be able to show you the law

Mr. BELL. A gentleman connected with the Pension Office drew this amendment for me, suggesting that it had been recommended by that Department:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 4718 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed so far as the same relates to pension claims arising under the act of June 27, 1890, and the amendments thereto of May 9, 1900.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the case covered by that bill is this: That is, where the man went out of the rebel army and went into the Union Army and while fighting there was shot, he can recover for service injuries.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is exactly what I stated the law to be, and I shall get it and read it in a few minutes.

Mr. BELL. There is a law providing that he can be pensioned, except under dependent act of 1890, for mere poverty.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Precisely as I have said. But he can be pensioned under the act I have in mind.

Mr. BELLI. Yes, certainly; he would be entitled to pension if he was shot or otherwise injured in the service.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Of course if he was not injured, he would not be entitled to a pension anyway.

Mr. BELL. Dependent Union soldiers are pensioned under the act of 1890, with service injury, because of mere dependence.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But it covered the case to which I referred.

Mr. SNODGRASS. The act of 1890 repealed the inhibition against Confederate soldiers who served in the Federal Army receiving pensions; and I think the Commissioner of Pensions so held, but his decision was reversed by the Secretary of the In-

Mr. BELL. I think that is correct. I think it excepted, how-ever, the Mexican war veterans. Mr. SNODGRASS. The Mexican war veterans, and also Confederate soldiers serving under those circumstances.

Mr. BELL. That, however, applies only to the act of 1890. Under this dependent act a man who served in the rebel army and afterwards in the Union Army can not be pensioned except for actual service injuries. Now, Mr. Chairmam, I reserve the remainder of my time.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The committee informally rose; and, Mr. GARDNER of Michigan having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, sundry messages. in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BARNEY. I yield to my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, if I correctly understood the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Bell] who has just taken his seat, he said that this nation was growing larger and richer day by day. I do not, therefore, desire to take any of the time of the House with any comments upon what the gentleman from Colorado has said. But I do desire to have sent to the desk, and to have read in my own time, a short extract from the Congressional Record of January 10. I ask the Clerk to read. The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Robinson of Indiana. I fully understand that my entry into this discussion may be construed by some as laying me under the charge of being a "carping critic," to use the language of the gentleman in charge of this bill. At the present time the Treasury of the country is overflowing. The times are prosperous. We have in the Treasury to-day a surplus of nearly $350,000,000. This is the beginning of a session of Congress. It is a suitable occasion, a suitable time and place to begin a system of legislation which shall look to cutting down the surplus in the United States Treasury. One way to accomplish this is by reducing taxation, the other way is by the passage of bills like this.

Mr. JENKINS. Now, Mr. Chairman, that was the language of Mr. JENKINS. Now, Mr. Chairman, that was the language or one of the ablest Democrats and one of the strongest partisans upon the floor of this House; and I want to say to him and to the Democratic party generally that it is a great tribute to the Republican party, a greater tribute, perhaps, than any Republican on this floor would be willing to pay to the Republican party. I say also, in all kindness, that nothing of that kind could be truthed to the Democratic party from the time of Jackson down fully said of the Democratic party from the time of Jackson down to the present day. I also want to say to you that if the people of this country will keep the Republican party in power there will be no question but what the war taxes will be removed, the revenues of the country will be reduced, and prosperity will continue to be among us.

The rivers and harbors of the country will be improved as they need improvement; the Nicaraguan Canal will be constructed, and all persons entitled to a pension under this and other bills will receive due and adequate pensions for their services to the country. New public buildings necessary throughout the nation will be constructed, and a sufficient surplus for all the needs of the Government will be found in the Treasury of the United States, and this, I repeat, is due to the magnificent record made by the Republican party.

by the Republican party.

Mr. THAYER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly.
Mr. THAYER. Won't you add, among all of the good things that you are giving to us, reciprocity with Cuba and independence for the Philippines?

Mr. JENKINS. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

Mr. THAYER. The evil is now pressing and ought to be

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, it is pretty near time that in all branches and departments of our Government we have more business and less politics. Particularly is this true of the legislative branch of Government. It will greatly aid the people. There is nothing so dear to the hearts of all those desiring a political job as to be of service to the people by bettering their condition. Claiming to be the foremost nation in the world, unquestionably Claiming to be the foremost nation in the world, unquestionably the leader in commercial life, this country should be administered on business rather than on political lines. Our greatness to-day as a nation, if not due to accident more than design, is certainly due to the wonderful resources of the people. There is no excuse to-day for that Democratic opposition to Republican legislation for our new possessions as there was for the Federals and Whigs opposing the progress of the Democratic party in acquiring foreign territory and legislating for it and the people who came with it.

The Democratic party was not only determined to uphold slavery, but to extend it and make slave labor an element of our national life. The Federals, Whigs, and Republicans were unalterably opposed to slavery and exerted every effort and made every argument possible against it. If they could defeat the extension of slavery, they knew in time the South would be the principal sufferer from its existence, but that if extended through the influences of the National Government, in direct opposition to the people directly interested, their belief was that it would never be abolished and would present this records have the people directly interested, their belief was that it would never be abolished and would prevent this people being the great nation they now are. No doubt any lover of this country would like to erase from the history of this nation the opposition of the Federals and Whigs to acquiring foreign territory that naturally belonged to this nation and was for the interests of all the people to acquire. Contrast the history of the Democratic party in this regard from Jefferson to Buchanan with reference to the acquisition of foreign territory and legislation necessary and proper to follow such an event with the sayings and doings of our Democratic friends since voting this country into the Spanish-Americation. cratic friends since voting this country into the Spanish-American war, and the differences will readily be seen.

After a declaration of peace the result of war generally brings great responsibilities and duties. At such a time we require a united country, not a party of opposition to everything proposed or done. Such a course brings vicious and dangerous legislation, rather than beneficial results. It was this kind of Democratic opposition that forced upon this country so much unfortunate legislation at the close of the civil war, making a breach that has taken lation at the close of the civil war, making a breach that has taken forty years to heal. If our people were united on a national policy, no matter how widely they differed in matter of detail, the nation would be the gainer. It is useless to say that the American people are not equal to any emergency or any condition. Success will certainly crown their efforts if once united in matters of policy. The following quotation is applicable and can be read with profit for national, party, and individual purposes:

On the high road of public life are strewn broadcast the miserable fragments of party doctrines shattered by overstrain, like the dead mules and broken-down wagons in the track of an advancing or retreating army. Theories of mathematical precision are good in books of geometry, but not in the conflict of great affairs. Men of action are the masters, not the slaves of doctrine. What the world needs, demands, and will have is more of practical statesmanship and less of bigoted exclusiveness of doctrine. He to whom it never happened to think or know something to-day which he did not think or know yesterday must have been born omnisciently infallible or has not yet advanced from the innocent simplicity and petulant willfulness of infancy. (Two Treaties of Paris, page 21.)

History conclusively shows that up to the civil war the Democratic party was favorable to the acquisition of foreign territory, insular in nature, and insisted that there was abundant authority for such action and for the government of the people acquired with the territory, by a substituted sovereignty, whether satisfied or not with the forced change. The many questions troubling that party to-day never gave the party a thought when the Democratic party wanted Cuba in connection with the vast territory acquired from different governments as a result both of peace and war, but in all cases for the benefit and glory of the United States. Jefferson never made an official declaration that he had any doubts about it. Knowing that the progress of the nation was diametrically opposed to his democratic belief, he quietly and in a personal way intimated that he was going to do a great public act that he personally and politically knew to be wrong, and progress was made by him in absolute opposition to his political teachings of a lifetime, and nothing but good and benefit for the United States has resulted from his public course and action.

I consider the relations between the United States and Cuba in every aspect of the case, whether for immediate separation or continued exercise of sovereignty by the United States over Cuba, as important as any other question before the American people.

I speak not for forcible annexation, for I was never an expansionist; but a condition of affairs of vast importance confronts us, not only of interest to the people of the United States and the people of Cuba, but to the whole civilized world.

There is an onward march of great events that can not be stayed. That man or political party is lost who does not keep advised of the current of affairs and act accordingly, keeping in line with the destiny of this great nation.

History discloses that for over one hundred years this nation has wanted Cuba, needed Cuba, and Cuba has needed, and will continue to need, the protecting arm of this civilizing, progressive, and powerful nation.

The arguments that have been made from the days of Jefferson down to the present time in favor of the acquisition of Cuba and extending the sovereignty of the United States over the island of Cuba have been able, patriotic, and on the line of true statesmanship, and the logic unanswerable. Every word said in favor of extending the sovereignty of the United States over the island of Cuba is as true now as at the different times previously spoken.

Let us see what history says on this important subject:

JEFFERSON.

It is enough for us to know as far as Jefferson was concerned that he was in favor of the annexation of Cuba. In a letter to James Monroe, October 24, 1823, Mr. Jefferson, among other things, said:

But we have first to ask ourselves the question, Do we wish to acquire to our own confederacy any one or more of the Spanish provinces? I candidly confess that I have ever looked on Cuba as the most interesting addition which could ever be made to our system of States. The control which, with Florida Point, this island would give us over the Gulf of Mexico and the countries and isthmus bordering on it, as well as all those whose waters flow into it, would fill up the measure of our political well-being (Vol. 10, Writings of Thomas Jefferson, by Putnam, p. 277.)

Mr. Jefferson, writing to James Monroe, June 23, 1823, with reference to his understanding as to the desire of the inhabitants of Cuba, and to his opposition to Cuba falling into the possession of England, says:

We are surely under no obligation to give her gratis an interest which she has not; the whole inhabitants being averse to her, and the climate mortal to strangers, its continued military occupation by her would be impracticable. It is better then to lie still in readiness to receive that interesting incorporation when solicited by herself, for certainly her addition to our confederacy is exactly what is wanting to round our power as a nation to the point of its utmost interest. (Writings of Thomas Jefferson, by Putnam, vol. 10, p. 200.)

Mr. Jefferson, in a letter to President Madison of the 27th of April, 1809, speaking of the policy that Napoleon would probably pursue toward us, says:

pursue toward us, says:

He ought to be satisfied with having forced her [Great Britain] to revoke the orders on which he pretended to retaliate, and to be particularly satisfied with us, by whose unyielding adherence to principle she has been forced, into the revocation. He ought the more to conciliate our good will, as we can be such an obstacle to the new career opening on him in the Spanish colonies. That he would give us the Floridas to withhold intercourse with the residue of those colonies can not be doubted. But that is no price, because they are ours in the first moment of the war, and until a war they are of no particular necessity to us. But, although with difficulty, he will consent to our receiving Cuba into our Union, to prevent our aid to Mexico and the other provinces. That would be a prize, and I would immediately erect a column on the southernmost limit of Cuba and inscribe on it a ne plus ultra as to us in that direction. We should then only have to include the north in our confederacy, which would be in the first war, and we should have such an empire for Liberty as she has never surveyed since the creation; and I am persuaded that no constitution was ever before so well calculated as ours for extensive empire and self-government. * * I twill be objected to our receiving Cuba that no limit can then be drawn to our future acquisitions, Cuba can be defended by us without a navy, and this developes the principle which ought to limit our views. Nothing should ever be accepted which requires a navy to defend it.

John Quincy Adams, while Secretary of State under Mr. Monroe, in a dispatch to Mr. Nelson, our minister at Madrid, of the 28th of April, 1823, says:

John Quincy Adams, while Secretary of State under Mr. Monroe, in a dispatch to Mr. Nelson, our minister at Madrid, of the 28th of April, 1823, says:

In the war between France and Spain, now commencing, other interests, peculiarly ours, will, in all probability, be deeply involved. Whatever may be the issue of this war, as between those two European powers, it may be taken for granted that the dominion of Spain, north and south, is irrevocably gone. But the islands of Cuba and Porto Rico still remain, nominally and so far really dependent upon her that she yet possesses the power of transferring her dominion over them, together with the possession of them, to others. These islands from their local position are natural appendages to the North American continent, and one of them, Cuba, almost within sight of our shores, from a multitude of considerations has become an object of transcendent importance to the commercial and political interests of our Union.
